

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

.

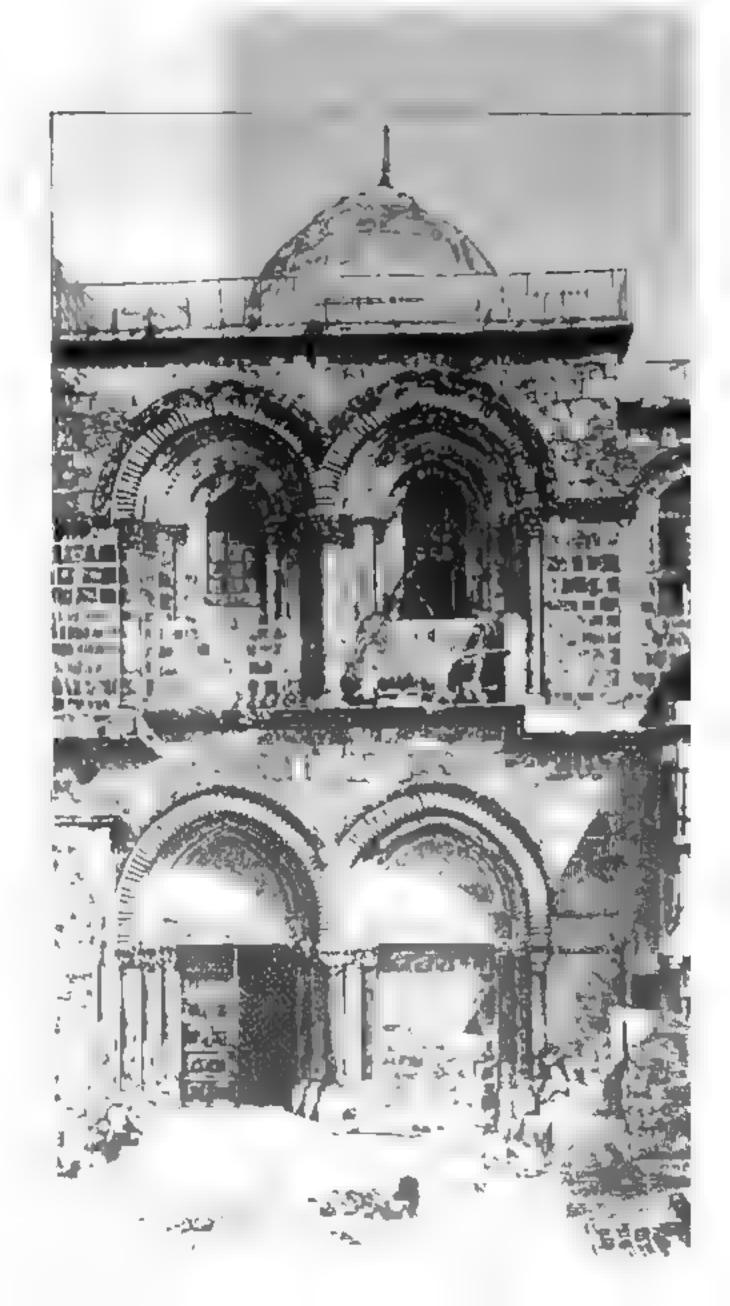

JERUSALEM

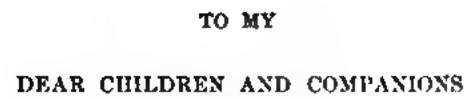

THE HOLY CITY ITS HISTORY AND HOPE

RV

Copyright, 1801, By MACMILLAN & CO

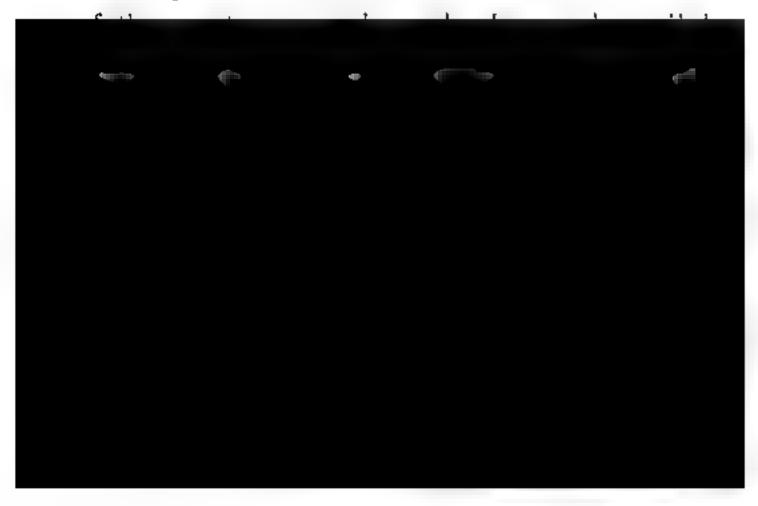

NOTE.

THE writer scarcely needs to say that this book is no record of Eastern travel: her experiences in the Holy Land having no special importance, save as making more vivid to herself the scenes to which the INTRODUCTION.

THE story of Jerusalem is one of the most wonderful in the world, besides being of unparalleled impor-tories of living men. A learned sect studies and scrutinises with painful confusion of images what a great Rameses may or may not have done; but the child of to-day wants no better entertainment than that story of Joseph and his brethren which is told in every language and never fails to touch the simple heart. Before Homer had begun his primitive minstrel strain to celebrate the fights and wiles of the chiefs and kings, Isaiah had risen to the highest heights of poetry, had opened the great dim gates of Hades, and had revealed, on the other hand, a dazzling glimpse of a Heaven in which one God sat upon a throne of light, and judged and tried the spirits of men. There is no such record in all the histories. The psalms which began with David, breathe forth the deepest emotions of our race to-day. The wisdom which throughout all the tenacious East bears the name of Solonion, has never been outpassed by any successor. And when we descend the course of the ages and come to a still more glorious and wonderful lastory, it is Jerusa. lem still which is the scene both of tragedy and triumph, of the greatest and most wonderful life which was ever forms the sole standing-ground for this demand. Very few people know the Hebrew language, or are able to test these assertions, except by such light of ordinary criticism as they may happen to possess, by the laws of literature and the force of nature; but I think that few, comparatively, will be tempted to transfer a faith, in which they have been trained from their childhood, to a small group of unknown persons, whose motives are dubious, and their methods more ingenious than ingenuous; and to reject on their authority, as a series of often fraudulent fables, the history so full of nature, so instinct with every feeling of humanity, which has been the food of our transfer and to him the history of the law has been the food

Lave private intelligence on the subject, if not that the different editions, "redactions," of which he discourses to glibly, must have been entered at some ancient Stationers' Hall, of which the register has fallen into his hands. M. Renau tells us cheerfully that no such person as Abraham ever existed, and that on another page of his own book (Le Peuple d'Israel) there will be found "des données plus solides" upon this imaginary personage. But when we turn, somewhat anxiously, to that previous page, we find nothing but the statement of M. Renau, unsupported even by any suggestion of proof—a statement which seems to me the least solid of all foundat. Its of belief. That has also at the that David foundat, as of belock. That has also at an that Davi as inventing instruments of music, like David. The reader will judge whether his faith in Abraham or in David—men whom he has known from his youth up, of whom he has in his hands the unvarnished record, in which there is naught extenuate, but everything good and bad impartially set down—is shaken by such assertions.

everything they do is done with the distinct motive of proving their own negative. M. Renan rejoices, as the accomplished end of their inquiries, that every one is now able to form his own romance about the origin of religion, it being clearly proved that no religion has any supernatural origin, and that God, if there is a God, never spoke to man at all. In what then can the unlearned take refuge? In proofs like those quoted above? in the disintegration of a consistent and living record? My own conclusion is very simple. I will take Herr Wellhausen's word for nothing, above all for nothing on which he has formed his theory before he began to inquire into the subject. I will take M. Renan's with tender that him those works by which he is most chiefly known, I am unable to conceive. The use of criticism may justifiably come in to examine and judge, according to the differing style and references of the Psalms, which may be most surely attributed to David, and which to later writers. This commends itself to reason. I do not think the other does so, especially as I find nothing but mere sweeping denial of a fact which rests not only upon the assertion of the only existing witnesses, but on the unbroken tradition of a people whose records are avowedly the most ancient and the most continuous of all nations on the earth. I believe it has been quite impossible (in a very much less important matter) to come to any certain conclusion in respect, for example, to the socalled poems of Ossian, a publication of this century, of avowedly modern redaction. Are they genuine? are they not so? It is difficult to believe that any natural and genuine baid ever uttered anything so inflated and artificial yet it is can dy nopessible to deny that there is foundation in the Berting trightness of the Highlands for much that was published by Marphasen. Thus in aguston el carowr sowil little ter Iswall i, and the tracks the author, the author the mits of the contract of the contract of the Little , at its Boot to of Discourt and the Constant . Intita of the part of the section f] value for the first term of er this lead to the at side of the at some lite to a cit t + st +, 1 + s11 , ' , ' to so text to see that // ' suffered with him, rejoiced with him, if it is not himself who thus pours forth his heart, in the fields of Bethlehem, under the great stars almost projected out of heaven in their grandeur—or in the high places of Israel, and the gates through which, with songs and rejoicing, he carried the Ark of the Lord. Who is it? what closest comrade? what dearest friend? what all-devoted poet? if it is not David, the sinner and sorrowful, the man of passion and strife, of penitence and confession, the man we know? To another man whom I do not know, whom no one ventures to name, I will not transfer the songs that have been sung as his for three thousand years, the first strains of divine particles of the contract of the CONTENTS.

PART I.-THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

CHAPTER I.

PAGE

xxii	CONTEN	TS.
JEREMIAH	СНАРТЕ		•••••	PAGE 270
	CHAPTER
EZEKIEL		• • • • • • •		327
PART III.— TI	HE RETURN	AND	RESTOR	ATION.
	СНАРГЕ	R I.
ZERUBBABEL—EZRA		• • • • • · · ·		354

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

EAVE	NE OF THE	KILDON	WHILLIAN SS	de l'Arrida
_	• 5				ė.
in .					1
¥

EIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

	PAUS
ANCIENT MANUSCRIPT AT SHKURKN	302
BANIAS: NEAR THE ANCIENT DAN	314
JERUSALEM . SORTH-KASTERN CORNER. NEBY SAMWIL IN T	ne .
DISTANCE COLORS	317
THE GOLDEN GATE	349
DOME OF THE ROCK, SITUATED ON THE SITE OF THE ASCIE	NT
TEMPLE:	. 361
IN THE TEMPLE ENGLOSURE. THE TOMB OF ELIAN	372
SCULPTI RI D CAPITAL	377
SCUIPTURED CAPITAL	379
NORTH-FAST CORNER OF WALL, TEMPLE ENGLOSURE (HARA	M-
180 800 R0F)	394
WESTIRS WALL OF JERUSALEM, WITH JAFFA GATE,	309
OTEN AIR TOTPIT IN THE TEMPTE ENCLOSURE	408
VILLAGE OF BANKS (CESAREA PHILIPPI), ON THE SOURCES	OF.
DORDAN	427
SAZAID III	La
THE RELIEF CLASS ROAD	1.56
RACHUL'S TOME ON THE WAY TO LETTE THE ME	1.8
COSMEN, OC. THE NACIMITY, I. THEOREM	140
$ $ 1111 \ \ \ 1 \	116
$(1,0,1,0) = (1,1) \cdot $
STEEN ON THE WAY STEWARD TO THE TELL OF	- 1
1 3 3 01 3 1	11.5
1 1 3 1 1 (3 (6 (1 8 3) 8 (13 (1
AIN CLUB SOLVER AND A STATE OF THE STATE OF roman parameters of the state o	1
05 11 5 0 15 1 1 3 11	- 1
	1

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS.
	BUAT
AYRIAN CHILDREN WITH PALM BRANCHES	530
ON THE HILL OF EVIL COUNSEL
KL-AKBA: IN THE TEMPLE ENCLOSURE	542
ANCIENT OLIVE-TREE IN THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE	, 552
FOUNTAIN NEAR THE GATE OF THE CHAIN	833
THE THE THE THEST ENDING	fat 1

PART I.—THE HOUSE OF DAVID.1

CHAPTER I.

2

king, and united, after civil war and many disturbances, the whole nation of Israel under one head, something in the form of a capital, or centre of royal authority, from whence laws might proceed, and where government should dwell, must have become necessary. David was at this-time living in Hebron, at the farther end of his kingdom, a place with no claim either to central position. or special strength. Saul, his predecessor, had, it would appear, entertained no idea of royal state or central authority. He was a man of war, and no statesman; the experiment of kingship was new, against all the previous ideas of the tribes: and the first king, in his confused and troubled intelligence, and life of excitement, warfare, and mistake, had little time for those ideas of consolidation and permanent establishment which are necessary for the maintenance of authority and government. We are not told in what way David was directed. towards the little stronghold of the Jaristics is his steof his thiora. It would seer to be no his care personal elemental indicator, tell materials and He must have been accounted with it in his vest the case of by a state Lie A National Lie to the called be the t , H 1, s t, 1 t e e si pio sa green but rocky hill which lay opposite the Jebusite city, it must have been faint and dim, especially as, at that time, when places of sacrifice were many, and every famous inhabitant had somewhere built an altar, even so great and memorable a sacrifice as that of Abraham's would scarcely bear the importance which has attached to it in later days. We have no reason to suppose that the young warrior had as yet conceived the great idea of a temple to be placed upon that twin hill, and the double strength of altar and throne to be thus given to the capital of his kingdom. But the Jebusite city at once pleased his eye and satisfied his mind as adapted for his purpose.

1 4 7 1

the townsmen could keep out the victorious bands of Judah. The city was taken, the fortress, high upon the western height, and all the low square and windowless hovels which hung about it. In all probability there has been little change since then in the strange little dark dwellings which Arabs and Syrians still inhabit in our own days, and which are rather shelters from the sun by day and the dew by night for a people whose life is chaefly spent in the open air, than dwellings such as we understand. Many a hillside throughout Palestine still shows around the one point of distinction, the fort or mosque which is its centre, those level lines, square and low, with openings of wide doorways and flat roofs of mingled clay and straw, or something less savoury still, which are the houses natural to the soil, often exproming it to chambers darker, yet cooler still, wrought out in the rock below or behind

Such, no Lubt, was the city wind. Divid took and was not in lemmatherated by of Divid, the strenglold of Zin, and viwhich, has his more in Lence in the world than a various of the translation of the first the little strength of the first in the city of the c history, and that of the Eastern hero and warrior, the shepherd, the poet, the feudatory chieftain, the king of Israel, who first made for it an everlasting name.

David, the son of Jesse, of the tribe of Judah and the town of Bethlehem or Ephrath—the latter being the ancient name of the time of the patriarchs—was the youngest of a large family possessing land and some importance in the district, which was one of much agricultural and pastoral wealth. The soft slopes on which farther slopes and edge of the valley. Though Jesse was a substantial man, rich enough to send supplies to his sons with the army, and offerings to propitiate their captain, his household, like all families of the time, was fully occupied by the care of the family property and possessions, on a footing very little different from that of the servants born in the house, who were a sort of humble brethren and counted among its children. David was the shepherd-boy, the lowest and least skilled of the brothers in those early days, when Samuel, the old prophet from Ramah, paid a visit to their city, and honoured the house of Jesse by choosing it for his resting-place. The public reason for this visit was to offer a sacrifice, an object apparently accepted as natural and just by the elders of the town; but Samuel's chief motive and interest was in his review of the sons of Jesse, seven yeing in of fine stature and good looks, any one of whom ppered to the proplet I for the divine choice, but not analong there was the most net the Lei-

The young stays absent, keeping the sheep a beyof no partieum recount in the pastee of the first on the partieum recount in the pastee of the first on the pastee of the first of the pastee of the pa

П

,

, 1

silently proclaiming the praises of the Lord. All these natural sounds and sights had entered into his heart, which was full of that tender piety of youth not always maintained in maturer life, which is one of the most beautiful aspects of humanity. That he also possessed great courage and strength is evident from the statement of his struggle with the lion and the bear in defence of his flocks. But great as was the promise of his early years, young David, amid the members of the household, was but the junior—a youth unacquainted with the world and its fiercer enjoyments of battle and raid, at the time of the old prophet's visit. How it was that the anomating of David which was Son wells special to store nimble youths that ran by the old man's side as he ambled upon his mule along the narrow paths between the fields, as still the young attendants run, to anticipate any wish of the great man they escort and accompany, to lead his beast over the hard places of the way, and render him that reverential homage which is never so perfect as in the East. And then the soft landscape, the young shepherd-lad disappear from our vision for a time, and the prophet goes his way to the disappointments that awaited him—the endless chidings and heart-burnings which attended the troubled path of Saul.

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

1.]

"Yea, though I walk in death's dark vale,
Yet will I fear none ill:
For Thou art with me; and Thy rod
And staff me comfort still.
My table Thou hast furnished
In presence of my foes;
My head Thou dost with oil anoint,
And my cup overflows.

Goodness and mercy all my life
 Shall surely follow me:
 And in God's house for evermore
 My dwelling-place shall be."

Another picture never to be obliterated came into his dreaming soul when he sat by night, with that great

Thus he sat and sang his happy songs in the pleasant valley and upon the fragrant hill, with the low line of. the roofs of Bethlehem, and the distant enclosure of his father's house shining under the broad radiance of that Eastern moon, and all manner of great thoughts swelling in his youthful bosom, ambitions perhaps-the vague eestasy of those visions of distinction and fame, and of making a great name, which are common to the dreaming boy, whether in the east or in the west, in ancient ages or at this day. He who invented instruments of music in his latter days, and took so much pains with the choirs and anthems of the national worship, we may be sure had made himself some shepherd's pipe upon which to play, more melodious, let us hope, than the doleful Arab pipe which sounds upon those slopes in the present age. that some valley, so full of associations, Ruth, the young with a tem the land of Moab, whose name has become a symbol of faithful affection, gleaned ramong the alien corr, and won the heart of the rick landowner Beaz, and it in a gesericely their forgotten Rahab, another for eign what of less cachtable a feedents but a calitating emea for the doc banks of the John line to sta the contract of the contract o to the state of th 1 1 / 11 / 1 / 1

[.]i (* \| , ,

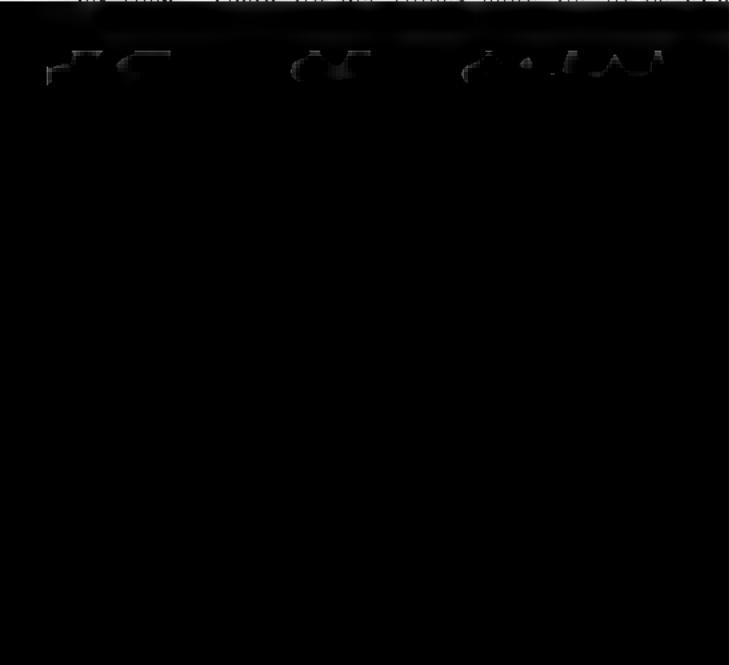

¹

while he fulfilled his youthful occupation about the pleasant hills. An English youth with perhaps a Spanish grandmother, with the tradition of some dazzling beauty from the East among his progenitors, might thus feel himself the inheritor of all the races, mingling the romance of his foreign ancestresses with the masterful confidence of the Englishmen who have conquered and assimilated all these alien glories. And David, in the fair country in which he was born, must have felt the thrill of the stranger inspiration, the poetry of the beautiful women thus made to contribute to the perfection of his race. I have heard a hot theorist deny the proposition disagree-

pendent of chronology; yet this must have occurred

12

here and there, and slopes of pastureland, David had come eager and expectant from Bethlehem, with his burden of parched corn for his brothers, and home-made cheeses for a present to their captain; and one of the first things that attracted him, eager for every sign of battle, would be the sight at which the two armies were looking on, and which interrupted every movement. Between the opposing hosts upon the bank of the stream, in sight of both, strode forth the swashbuckler, Goliath, daring the armies of Israel, a big man, blazing in his rich armour under the sun, with the huge spear in his hand which has been part of the equipment of so many giants since

1 1

David made no more reply than any other young hero made light of among his kindred. He took his way into some other indifferent group, indifferent to himself, wholly occupied with the brag of the Philistine and the humiliation of having no man among them who would venture to meet him: and listened to every word that was said. Great promotion and honour, the king's daughter to be his wife, a place unequalled among the host which stood there overawed at the sight of the bully. It is too early an age for love-stories, or it might be imagined that David had already raised his eyes, as to one altogether out of his reach, to the daughter of Saul, the sister of Jonathan who loved him. But it must be remembered also that love had already begunto bear a part in the history of the Hebrews, which no otler arcient history has allowed. Jacob, that man of riches at trapacity, true parent of the grasping dew of resocratimes, had loved his Racel I keeply Chais. true kright, that sauting their hos, the conviction Lunaan records in absolute rome access has reverent ned into the torughts of any growfull track. But it woll 1 to traval and into as rate as the Post of the December of the Post of th and the company of Market Committee of te to a to so I the second the heavens the work of God's hands, and where, in the fervour of his youth he had felt himself to be the object of a heavenly care and love more deep than his own devotion to the few sheep in the wilderness, which yet he had guarded at risk of his life—the passion of his young soul for the honour of the God of Israel, the living God, the Lord who needed not that His champion should bear sword or spear, was as a fire in his heart. Something of the absolute trust which is more easy to youth than to any other period of life, an almost braggadocio of self-abnegation, generous scorn of all precaution, the confidence not so much of a hero as of a child.

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

retreating army? "The men of Israel and Judah arosa fall. In the same way Saul, fallen from his high estate, cast down to the very depths of that excitable and sensitive nature which made him so subject to all external influences, makes the heart of the reader ache with pity: and but for the wild chivalry and generosity which soon show themselves in David, would draw away our sympathies altogether in his forlorn and heaven-abandoned kinghood, in his wild impetuous hastmess and the mistakes of his desperation, from that young and applauded hero, of whom it is said that all he did pleased the people. David, however, escapes that unpleasing contrast of the prosperous with the unfortunate by the hearts of men, and one cannot but wonder how the commentators, whose criticisms are supposed to destroy the consistency of these records, making of them a mass of disjointed scraps put together to serve certain purposes of statecraft by various hands at various times, have been able to free themselves from the charm and spell of buman sympathy which is in these marvellous narratives Two more distinct human creatures than Saul and David never existed, nor can we imagine a story more deeply moving, more tragically true to nature. The great warrior, now fading from the glory of his youth, never a man of judgment, hasty, passionate, mistaken, unable to learn the self-command and obey the restraints that hem about the footsteps of a ruler, yet full of a certain primitive greatness, standing high above the ress of ordinary men, both in the heyday of his vilou is the tragedy of his despair, and nodest in-Lispi ser all verint et lis effice, vet pelligis al la equipped keeping on or his thoralist the paraser the admining levelet settle consciousness area violeticos ing both ilefbeng, epil elice pa seller to lee star of the area or a state of the 4 1 1 to 1 1 1 1 1) 1 1 1

16

of t

H

called forth, as such menials do, a certain tribute of easy praise, to whom the eyes of all men were turning. To David the Ephrathite, the son of Jesse—to him who had been nobody till the other day, and was nobody save as the king's favour made him! It is but too easy to understand the exasperation, the keen sense as of a use-less struggle, yet fierce determination to get rid of and overthrow this disturber of his life, which was in the mind of Saul.

And how full of life and nature is the whole scene, the consultations of the younger members of the house-hold who love him with the persecuted and threatened convinced of the deadly peril in which he stood, and not knowing where to find refuge. To go home to Bethlehem does not seem to have occurred to him. Probably he was not assured of any welcome there if he arrived suddealy, a fugitive from the wrath of the king; perhaps even more likely, for his father and mother were still living who could not have refused him a shelter, he was afraid to draw upon his kindred the anger and veugeance of Saul. But more near than Bethlehem, more secure than any common house, there was the old prophet at Ramah to appeal to, he who had shown so much kindness to David, who had refused to allow the feast to begin till the shepherd-boy had been called, and who had kissed and anointed the ruddy lad fresh from the fields, as he had not done to Eliab or any of the stalwart brethren Though I think it is quite clear that David did not know what that anointing meant, yet it was a token of favour, and as he cast about in his i. ii where to turn for succour the recollection of Samuel must be vert she to ross has throughts like a sudden light

Nothing more will and strange than the description of least on a vestor as the contract of the was probably what we should call the college of the consecrated Levite youths, studying their future functions under the superintendence of the deeply experienced and highly gifted old man, who had served God from his infancy, and was the acknowledged head of all sacred science in Israel. That this instruction, however, was accompanied by ecstatic manifestations now coming upon one, now upon another, would seem to be implied in the strange narratives that follow. The messengers, men of the sword, soldiers of Saul's irregular and lately formed army, came suddenly, unaware, we may suppose, of what they were about to see, thinking only of their fierce of God's people: and now what was this erring and forbid," said the generous young man, trying even now to defend both father and friend. "It is not so; my father will do nothing great or small without letting me know: and why should he hide this from me?" It would appear from these words that Jonathan had not been aware of that expedition to Ramah. A touching arrangement was then made between the two young men. It was close to the time of the new moon, when Saul and all great men made feasts for their households, and where David's place would naturally be an important one, both as the king's son-in-law, and as one of the great warriors and captains of Israel. Jonathan consented to make an

excuss for the ed's absolute to the transfer and the first transfer and the edge at the ed

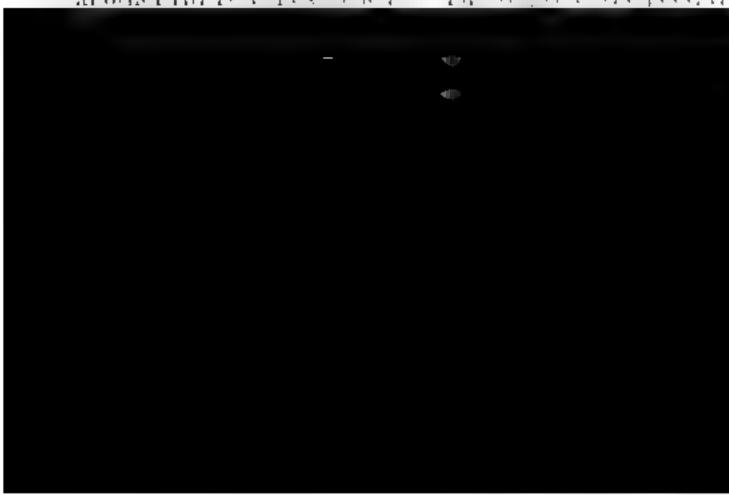

advisable to make no further show of his hostility to David, who was one of the props of his throne; and prepared as usual for the feast of the new moon, himself presiding, seated "as at other times upon a seat by the wall," the head of the primitive table, with Abner by his side, his commander-in-cluef. For the first day he took no notice of David's vacant place; but on the second demanded an explanation. "Why does not the son of Jesse come to meat, neither yesterday nor to-day?" Upon this question, Jonathan made the excuse that had been agreed upon. There was a feast of the family at Bethlehem, and David's brother-which looks as if Eliab was now head of the family, perhaps acting so on account of the age and weakness of Jesse, for there is still mention of the father later on-had commanded hua to be present. Upon this Saul burst forth into fury upbar up; the folly of his son "Do not I know that thou hast caosen the son of Jesse to those owr confuster " be ried. It was not Davin not the familiar. in me of the Laterfold, the name too furrous in Israel, which the angly kid coplay a bid toit of the dan less tree on the care at the call, A to Section 1 to the first terms of the section of الجراز والمراجعات . 4 4 4 Salt And the Comment ← { T 1] ← 1 transport of his anger and disappointment and fierce incapacity to bear opposition, snatched a javelin from the wall behind him, and flung it at his son, as he had before done at the object of their quarrel. It became evident that no more was to be said, nor the name of David named again in that primitive court, where it would appear no voice was raised for the ambitious young captain but that of the heir alone.

The reader's heart goes with Jonathan, as so often in these records. Saul and David are the chief figures in the struggle, one with the painful crown of tragedy, the other the laurels and the parans of success. But between them stands the noble of the man, father to show the second

tion is one that calls forth every sympathy and makes of this pure and chivalrous figure the lughest light in the wonderful picture. Jonathan went forth sad and angry, with that wrath of love that "works like madness in the bram," as soon as the morning dawned after this troublous scene, and took down his bow from the wall, and called a boy from among the many retainers to go with him, striding forth with a clouded brow, as all would understand, to divert his troubled mind with a favourite exercise. "The field" in which these meetings took place must have been some sheltered spot, some hollow on the other side of the hill, where there were rocks and caves, such as abound everywhere in Palestine, in which a fugitive could be hid; for it would seem that all this time David had been lurking near, no doubt in ore of these caves. There Jonathan shot his arrows as a duly to the sign agreed upon, and perhaps with Some show of impatience not to have hat a desired rank. greenes bew to his attach it as scon as the arrows had bein guthered ups and sent han hast volume. When the LUL data pocued the hid in lugitive stage forth ny to the explicit to the little 111 jamin. But when the friends met all these artificial distinctions would seem to have been swept away, and Jonathan and David kissed each other and wept. It was as if the friendly earth, upon which their young swift steps had gone together on many an errand both of war and peace, had been rent between them. Few words were needed, if any: the abyss was not one which could be bridged over with hopeful speech of better days and other meetings. They were silent in the rending asunder of their lives—"Go in peace; and the Lord be witness of that which is between me and thee," was all that Jonathan could say—"They wept one with another full David and let "The traffic of the peace, the

JERUSALEM.

[CH. I

- "The Lord is in His holy temple,
 The Lord's seat is in heaven:
 His eyes behold, His eyelids try, the children of men.
 The Lord trieth the righteous:
 But the ungodly and him that loveth wickedness Doth His soul abhor.
- "For the righteous Lord loveth righteousness; His countenance will behold The thing that is just."

CHAPTER II.

THE OUTLAW IN THE WILDERNESS.

THIS was the beginning of the most painful portion of Divil's life that probation in the wilderness.

the hostile races which surrounded Israel on ever and with no established centre of authority either i or sacred. For Saul's headquarters at Gibeah w more a royal capital than the dwellings from whi judges who preceded ham had partially and conf ruled the people, each in his own house. And i the ancient tabernacle of the wilderness which Gilead, nor the temporary re-establishment of th at Kirpith Jearim (the latter, it would seem, e fallen into forgetfulness), had been received as a n. slame but each tribe or district formed, as it seem, ther, own religious centre for themselves v o. I of the established ritual as was within their Diegonian a faint and weary at the house of the the astorished question of low he c with to formal action, by the exemasked if there were any weapons in the peaceful shrine; and it must have been a great encouragement to his soul when the priest drew forth out of its wrappings no other than the sword of Goliath, "whom thou slewest in the valley of Elah." It must have been as if God Himself had thus laid up in store for him the weapon to which no man had so clear a right—the sign of his first and greatest victory. "There is none like that; give it to me," he said, with a fervency of utterance in which we can fully sympathise.

It is less easy, however, to understand after this sign, which must, one would suppose, have appealed to his baron on either side. But terror was in the soul of the fugitive. He would seem to have found threatening faces about him from the moment he entered the foreign city. which was not wonderful considering what his achievements had been. He was like Corrolanus in Corroli, a man who had gained his name at the expense of those whose succour he sought; and it was soon apparent to him that safety was not to be found there. Perhaps be had hoped that he would not be recognised, but might pass as a mere Hebrew refugee in trouble with his own people, seeking service in the neighbouring court. But he soon became aware that a soldier so distinguished could not remain unknown. "Is not this David?" said the very first officials to whom he addressed himself. "David the king of the land? did they not sing one to another of him in dances, Saul has slain his thousands, and David his tens of thousands". Before even the news was car ask to Achish of this visitor whose appearance created so much commotion. David had began to parceive how great a mistake he had mine. The we der, which was so rendy to tarm auto a rience strey berned bia to to ke a spiesore a show that had use the re-Leaving tof nations was was believed the train a dt. Fa Wala the end of the end of plentiful householder, of honest and well-known folk, who had probably known what it was to suffer from the incursions of such wanderers, it might have appeared to him a better way to join the enemy as Coriolanus did, to be able to enforce terms upon his old persecutor, than to become in his turn a persecutor of the peaceful dwellers in the land, with whom all his sympathies were. But David had now no resource. He went back from Gath towards his own country again, a troubled and discouraged soul, the few retainers who had followed him drooping their crests as they toiled along the plain, until they reached that strange and wild district lying between the

OF ENGEDS.

In face page 12.

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

valour though not so distinguished as the first three

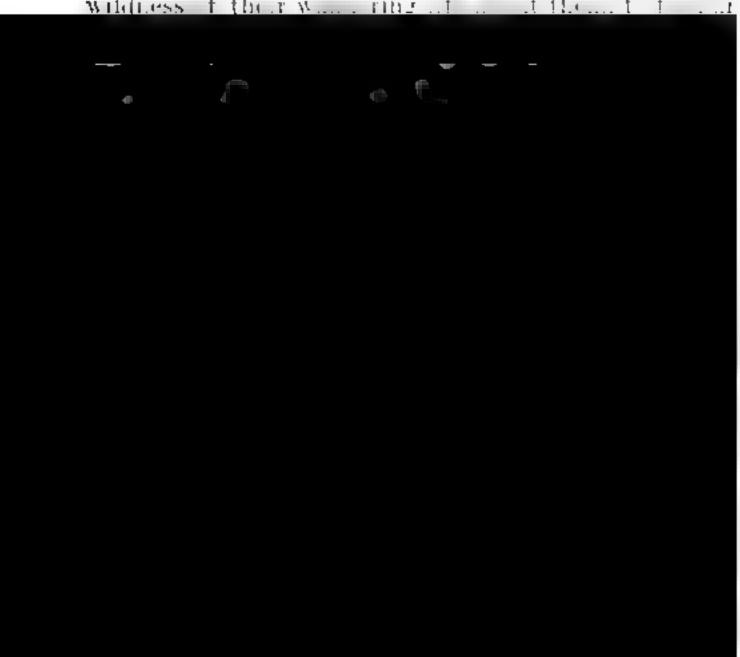

36

would bring with him for as long as it lasted his easily carried provision of parched corn, his cakes of bread and handful of fruit. There would need no hecatombs of slain cattle to maintain these eastern warriors: yet many a raid must have gone out from the stronghold of Adullam, to keep four hundred men alive—raids, however, in which the prey carried off was probably stores of bread, raisins, and figs and parched corn, as in the story of Nabal, with an occasional sheep, rather than the "lifted" cattle and utter desolation left behind them of modern reivers, a much less destructive kind of plunder. There must have been wild animals in those wild regions to make a sub-organised rebellion, no attempt upon the crown, was yet in arms, in self-defence, no more to be dealt with as an individual. Though he had been driven to it by the force of circumstances, and though he never raised his arm in offensive hostilities, not even Jonathan, who loved him, could plead now as in former times for the pardon of the misguided brother. Once again indeed that faithful friend came to him in the wilds where he had taken refuge, to warn him of renewed pursuit, and to repeat the covenant or oath of brotherhood between them: but after this hurried and secret meeting these two friends was the latter argument which moved him he was soon destined to discover how futile was any such trust. King Saul, who had not stirred to rescue the city, heard with delight that David had ventured into "a town that hath gates and bars," and at once gathered together his followers to besiege the rebel, concluding with premature triumph that "the Lord hath delivered him into my hands"; not so quickly, however, but that David had time to escape, having first assured himself that Keilah had no mind to stand a siege on his behalf. We may well imagine that the addition of six hundred outlaws (to which number the band had now increased), with the wildness of the rowner may it the state of the rowner may be stated to stated the stated the stated to stated the stated to stat

38

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

feast was less a petition than an inference: "Thy leaving, one would fear, but little for the disappointed sheep-shearers thus forced to redeem their lives at the cost of their feast—"two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine" (skins no doubt like those in the grotesque blunted shape of the animal to whom they belonged, which are still employed by the water-sellers about the streets of Syrian cities). "five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched corn," besides a liberal supply of fruit. Abigail was not a moment too soon; she met David and his men "by the covert of the hill" in warlike array with their swords girded on them, coming swiftly on to execute judgment. The record does in the state of th

[СНАР.

idioms may occupy the learned philologist for ever if he will, but will never make him aware how it was that in this primitive age a story worthy of the most magnanimous Christian chivalry could find a place—or more wonderful still be invented, where no code of manners or of morals existed to make such an incident possible had it not been true.

We are all acquainted from our cradles with these twin tales. David, hunted from place to place, now driven from the city he had rescued, now from the woods and wild recesses of the desert, was lurking with a band of his followers in a deep cave where perhaps they were listening breathless to the city of the list of

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

44

looked out from the heights upon the encampment below and saw the place where Saul lay with Abner his general close by. "Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp?" he asked after long gazing at the spot where his pursuers lay. Abishai, his sister's son, was the man who offered himself for that dangerous service, and when the night came, the two Eastern heroes, lightly clad, and softly shod, descended noiseless into the midst of the slumbering multitude. Again we are reminded of the ages of chivalry, of the minstrels' tales, and romance of modern thought. The two gliding figures reached the very centre of the encampment where the king lay, with his specific to the minstrels where the

JERUSALEM. [CHAP.

the greater shame to the ineffectual guard that it was one of the people, any man so to speak, who had been able to thread the sleeping ranks and carry off the king's spear. Saul was a man of unusual stature, and no doubt his spear was known among the people like that of Goliath, "like a weaver's beam." And to see it, with its glittering blade shining in the morning sun on the other side of the ravine in the hand of the poet-orator, whose indignant yet tender remonstrance came pealing over those depths, must have affected powerfully the listening and eager host, as it affected the unhappy king himself, in whom once more his better nature burst forth R t St. St. and st. and nd a parallel to David's case in that of a Scots noble in isgrace betaking himself with shame and wrath to the rotection of the English, with whom he had been in arfare all his life. In the same way the Douglas banhed sought refuge in England, nay even a Stuart, lexander of Albany, who was persecuted by his brother ames III. on warrant no greater than that of Saul, bllowed the same example: both, however, talling into ie guilt of plots against their native kingdon, from hich David kept hunself free.

The story of David is judged that of a blameless night, a cavalier sans peur et sans reproche up to this me. He had done all in honour from the first moment f his appearance, putting forth no pretensions, behaving imself with all the grate of a pertect hero. What little ansactions there may have been in the wilderness with iose six hundred an , their train of women and children provide for, there is so record; but at all events he ould seem to have be a consteous and conciliatory even othose upon who as said supplies, as in the asc of abal, where there is a sugratuating tone of framoness of modesty in the firm remaind, remainder the consefabrigud delt, et al Lo was so oble for lackmail, to be s arefully reast not ig but blacks " 1 (5) 1 5 7 defenceless people. Any defence of David, however, on this score is sophistry to us, and would have been the most unnecessary thing in the world to him.

At all events the severest critic can find little else to reproach David with in this period of his career. He was forced into—not rebellion, for no act against Saul's authority is ever suggested—but into a wild and feudatory life by incessant pursuit and persecution; yet he raised no hostile banner, put forth no pretensions to the crown. And when in despair and sickness of heart he turned away and directed his steps once more to the Philistine court to seek the protection of the ener ics of

JERUSALEM.

50

[CHAP.

or at the door of his tent in the clear Eastern nights, in those intervals of peace when the pursuers were not at his heels, was probably a mere chant with cadences, that wild natural strain nothing in itself but an aid to the utterance of the poem—the minstrel's story, or the mourner's lament, or the psalm of triumph and joy—which is the beginning of all primitive music. And such as the following were the songs of the desert, the cry of the exile and outlaw—

- "O Lord my God, in Thee do I put my trust: Save me from all them that persecute me; Deliver me lest he tear my soul like a lion, Rending it in pieces, while there is none to deliver.
- "O Lord my God, if I have done thus;
 If there be naquity in my hands;
 It I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me, (Year rether I have delivered him That with at anse was not enemy a last tree memorphism and take it,
 Yea, let him tread down my late upon the earth,
 And lay more here or in the dast

Arise O Lord in Hale larger, against the rage of in ne cian is Award for its. The axio 1 estimated as he

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

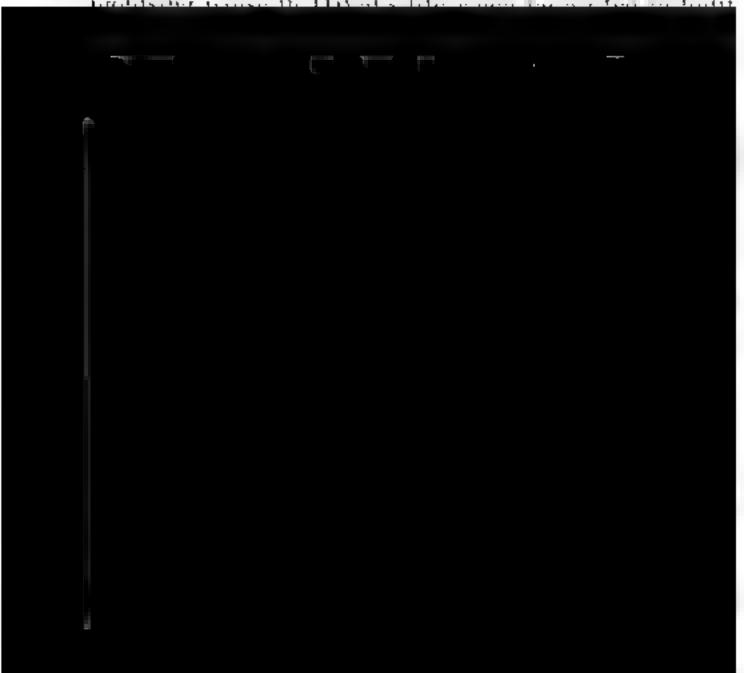

m.].

He hath conceived mischief,
And brought forth falsehood.
He made a pit, and digged it,
And is fallen into the ditch which he hath made.
For his mischief shall return upon himself,
And his violent dealing upon his own head.

"I will praise the Lord according to His righteousness:
I will sing praise unto the name of the Lord most high."

1

Another psalm which breathes the same spirit of almost despair, rising by the healing action of poetic utterance and deep reflection upon the grace of God into confidence and hope, we have already identified with that

It is, as has been already remarked, a commonplace say-what every devout reader must have felt in permal use of the Psalms-how often the denunciations of as enemies of the writer come in with a jarring discord nto the prayers and vows of the supplicant: yet so far Bavid personally is concerned there is not only much xcuse, but his force of malediction is in reality much ess than is supposed. Doeg the Edomite, who betrayed ie fact of his brief passage through Nob, and the kind ffices of the unfortunate priest, thus bringing about re massiere of that priest and all his family, was, for istance, a ruther, who would have had short shift in by echnia nity which on the other hand it is to be wanked that D v 's prayers for vengeance are limited the burner of the mes should fall into the net a halles a colour lam and the pit they have a later, and so seed of d has the state of t rant a real of the party party band for ability of the light of the lig 1 12 1 attensive and the end of the extreme to the extreme 2* 11 × 1> * t++* p* * * * * it , till, . . 1 1 5 1 ,1 , . , 1 '

ment of despair which led him: but he was no longer a solitary and powerless man, whose life might have been at any moment the forfeit of his temerity in thus venturing into the stronghold of his enemies, but at the head of a valiant and desperate band, certain to have sold their lives dearly if hospitality had been refused them. It is clear, as has been already said, that neither at this time nor at any other during Saul's lifetime had David any thought of an avowed and formalised rebellion. He was not a rival candidate for the throne, nor was he even stung by continual and unceasing paisure to set up any rebel standard. The necessities of existence drove him to the other contents of existence drove.

eir vantage groun I on the hill, upon that sleeping host rough which David threaded his way to the very tent the king, who could doubt that the result would have en most disastrous for Saul and his careless followers? ut no such idea ever seems to have entered his mind. The cynical reader may say that the strength was too rtainly on Saul's side to make any such attempt ssible, but that consideration has never restrained ly rebel of David's prestige and importance, nor obably could any ordinary levy of three or four times eir number have stood before these tried and renowned arriors led by such a chief. It is most singular and markable that no project of resistance ever seems to ive been considered. David and his men disappeared to the fastnesses which they knew so well, when they ere pushed by their parsuers; twice, as we have seen, attempted to overe -- the strong hostility against in by parley and the volumes of his own veneration r the Lord's cont But when neither continual thre, nor those s a magnumenty which Soil had e heart to approved to augh they analy no permanent fference in his action to deal to sit short the paison, and said in his best for a first of the said thind of Shall the post, a sittle party of at I should specifies it ento the limber the Prins s, pd S a d 1 , sp. r d r e te sel, n. s more 115 31 3 4 1 3 23

^{. + | 1 . | |}

^{11 11}

^{18 1 12} 11 at 1 1 at 16

found it difficult to pardon a Scottish knight who had accepted the protection of England. And the result was that the pursuit was stopped, and David was left alone in his exile. It was no doubt an advantage also to the harassed country, continually troubled by a kind of civil his protector "the Geshurites, the Gezrites and the Amalekites," all, it must be allowed, ancient enemies of Israel, and accordingly fair prey to a Hebrew warrior—destroying both cities and people and carrying away all their substance. That this was recognised as his means of living is evident from the highly characteristic question, put in all civility and friendliness by Achish, over whom the Hebrew chief had exercised his usual charm "Whither have ye made a raid to-day?" said this indulated lag, doubtless employing himself in various expeditions of the kind above recorded. and settling himself more

which the stronger ties of patriotism and kindred might have justified to himself? A more exciting moral crisis could not be. But we shall never know how it would have ended: whether faith unfaithful, and the honour of a fugitive so deeply indebted to his protector, or natural feeling and all the strong inducements of ambition and policy would have carried the day. Fortunately for

David must have listened to the echoes of this controversy, which no doubt had flown through all the camp as every new detachment arrived, and soon penetrated to where the Hebrews—heavy and sad—pitched their tents among the alien host. "Their honour rooted in dishonour stood:" every claim of gratitude and loyalty bound them to the generous king: and yet when they saw before them the standard of their country, and recognised the ensigns, each man of his tribe, what pangs must have been in every heart! The rage of the Philistine leaders no doubt fell like balm from heaven upon David and his men. He made a little polite objection, a little remonstrator to his royal autron— What have I greet their return, and every sign of a successful raid such as those with which they were themselves familiar, not a living creature left in the desolate place to tell the

of repose, when they had stopped for the night, and secure in the absence of all the warriors of the country and the impossibility of pursuit, had given themselves up to feasting and rejoicing. It was not only Ziklag that had been spoiled but the borders of Judah, and those of Philistia, both nations in preparation for the coming conflict having been compelled to leave their frontiers unguarded; and the night camp was surrounded by bleating of sheep and lowing of cattle, as well as by the unhappy groups of women and children huddled together, not knowing perhaps the moment when the caprice of their conquerors might inflict still greater misery. Upon and proving how very differently he had been employed than in the army of the Philistines, where no doubt the rumour had already run that he was in arms against Israel. Much the reverse! pursuing the Amalekites in a totally different direction, avenging his own quarrel and those of his compatriots, recovering the spoil which he thus generously shared with all his friends. The generosity and chivalry of David's character, so unexampled in his time, need not make us overlook those qualities of policy and astute calculation in which he was likewise strong. He was not a knight of romance alone, though he was so in a manner unknown to any other primitive literature of any nation-but at the same time he was a far-seeing and clear-headed Oriental chief, aware of a great future before him, and with no mind to neglect any just means of conciliating the popular fayour. That he should have been able to turn that decisive moment when fate seemed against him, when it seemed all but certain that he must compromise himself for ever with Israel by fighting on the sine of her end mies, into a triumph ait viidication of his patrictism and in falling sympaths for his contribution, stayinderful astronomatic very moveled for the and the cutificates of his described to get the reknows late ascethor Harriels, stage was in Dearly wealther the s I in it, st, I to, g and on fit a final fit of the Leave Visites Transfer the sole, to the fish for the con-1 all the signs of woe upon him, his garments rent and earth upon his head, ostentatious in his show of mourning, arrived with news of the fight. The Israelites had been beaten; they had been driven back dispersed and flying before the Philistines, and Saul and Jonathan were both killed. It was not a Hebrew but an Amalekite who brought the news, a man with no natural occasion for such lamentation, whose attempt to curry favour with himself was evidently more clear to David than his sorrow for the calamity. And when he proceeded to tell a fabulous story of how it was he who had killed Saul at the prayer of the defeated king "because I was sure

JERUSALEM.

[сплв.

his misery and downfall be fell upon his sword. It recalls the fervour with which the first James of Scotland pursued the same exercise, apparently without effect in either case. But the wonderful song of both national and personal sorrow, the lament of Israel at once and of David, whose affections had never been altogether alienated from Saul, the first patron of his youth, by any intervening events, and who loved Jonathan as a brother: is one of those immortal songs which to all nations and in all languages become the utterance of the heart.

"How are the mighty fallen! The beauty of Israel Is slam upon thy high places.

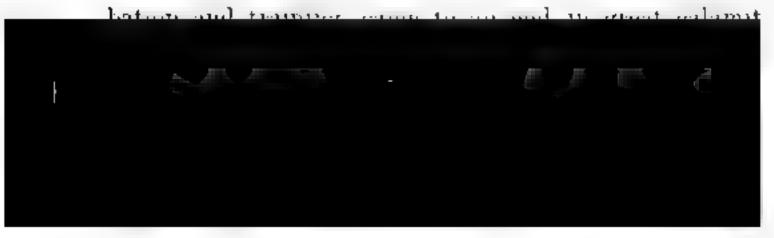

64

- Fall it not in Gath, Publish it not in the streets of Askelon;
 Lest the daughters of the Plabstines repace,
 Lest the daughters of the ratio are see Comparison.
- You at as the outlieter away at the first of the second of the second of the first of the second of the second

65

- "How are the mighty fallen In the midst of the battle!
- "O Jonathan,
 Thou wast slain in thy high places.
 I am distressed for thee,
 My brother Jonathan:
- "Very pleasant hast thou been to me: Thy love to me was wonderful, Passing the love of women.
- "How are the mighty fallen, And the weapons of war perished!"

Thus the first portion of the life of David, his pro-

CHAPTER III

THE KING OF BRAEL.

THE romance of David's life is so full of attraction I that we are a long time arriving at Jerus dem, which is the special aim of this carrietive. We will not therefore linger upon the isterment it steps, or the confused period when relapsed before his full recognition as King of Israel. It was only after receiving the Davine command that he left Zikleg and acvertised Unised in Hebron, in the so therm part of Joshan, as far top yed as the boundaries of the time permitted from the bonne of Saul: which had always been an important place, the ancient city of Ab alaim, still deeply venerated as such even in the present day. Here he settled with a certain tentative air, his men scattering themselves among the villages, many, no doubt, finding after all their wandermgs thear natis a homes again. His tribe which, no doubt, and follows: a is erratic career with interest, and heard a thousand reports and half-fabulous tales of his prowess, sides to standered attaching influence of those songs in the wine less, which had flown from lip to lip as eral later in a conserverywhere. But meaders so so by as in the lot of stays to the application of prise on a trass still to to trans so a Asia as a second and second as a second as retain their power, of anointing David king. One of his first acts was to reward and promise special protection to the men of Jabesh-Gilead who had recovered Saul's remains from the Philistines and given them honourable burial; and no doubt the strains of the funeral song were sung over the whole country at once in celebration of the dead and honour to the living. But David had yet many difficulties before him ere his position was established. These difficulties were not only with his enemies but among his friends and defenders, for it is only now that another figure, more rugged and far less attractive than David, but full of character and power, a draught to the tent door where their leader sat. What a waste of strength and effort he must have thought it! but when the question was one of haid lighting and the responsibilities of a great command, Joah and his attendant brothers were never at fault.

Strate shows the strategy of t

68

The first great event in David's reign was the battle between the supporters of Saul's family under his great general Abner, and the bost of Judah and servants of David under Joab. Abner, though he occupies but a small place in the record, is so set before us as to acquire all our sympathies. It would be hard to say precisely why thus is, for we have few details of this manly and noble personage and can scarcely give a reason for the attraction we feel towards him. His was all the real strength, that belonged to the impoverished house of Saulshorr of ats natural leaders, the heir as well as the head of the control of the techle ser fultion of a orange strathacter, details to be the true at his common, such that the inflict without clay, lep is to denot to a set a sect lististati les lletintokini teknik deceta and a litable factor to install engly studistic section 110 constraints ilzia Haribeta a tit Bari past of the state slies, I as the constraint Call to the transfer of the tr

We are not told what was the issue of that preliminary struggle—though no doubt it was mutual slaughter: but in the end Abner was beaten and his followers broken and dispersed, though not without a melancholy incident to spoil the triumph of the victors. The youngest of the three brothers, Asahel, was "as light of foot as a wild roe," and as Abner retreated pursued him, no doubt fired by the thought of distinguishing himself and emulating the exploits of his uncle David in his youth. Abner turned to warn the hot-headed lad again and again, bidding him seek a more fit antagonist, almost imploring him to save himself—But when such arguments proved speak with him quietly" killed him there. According to the morals of his age he had a right thus to avenge his brother; but it was a tragic incident with which to begin a reign. There was a universal mourning over the great general, who was honoured even by his adversaries: and some three thousand years after the people wept for Abner we, too, who read the story acknowledge a remorseful regret for the great career cut short, the noble knight laid low. David's wail over him is not so fine, nor so clear as his lament for Saul, being dictated by no such intimate connection. The untoward event, however, called forth indignation as well as regret.

To face page 76.

eighty of the nation, or to disturb the feeble sway of Ishbosheth in the midland tract of Palestine which recognised his authority; notwithstanding the constant muttering of hostilities, never brought to any decisive battle, which existed between them. In any case it is apparent that his views of kingship were very different from those elementary views of Saul who was more the champion of Israel than its monarch, and had not changed his residence nor probably much modified his living on account of that imperfectly comprehended charge. The kings of the surrounding nations were kings of cities, of small subdivisions of the country, without importance enough to far in any any steps to precipitate matters, but to have kept in full fidelity his promise to Saul not to cut off his house. In the meantime, however, it is impossible to doubt that his mind was full of thought and deliberation over the high part which he had yet to play and the best means of consolidating and establishing on the soundest foundations that kingdom which he foresaw.

Hebron was at the extreme end of the territory of Judali, much less suited than Gibeah had been for a capital. With our present ideas it would have seemed to us very natural that the historian should have spoken here of the sacred recollections of Moant Morials, and of that great act of Abraham which had made it so memorable. To the Jew of later times, as well as to the Christian, and to the Mohammedan, that association would assuredly have occurred, and have been stated, as an important motive in the choice of Jebus for the future capital, but ancient tradition is by no means clear upon the fact, and the more ancient writer occupies himself with that alone and leaves the motives to evidence themselves. The city of the Jebusites had other recommendetails. Its position was strong and central. The mountains encompassed it about like a natural grand. towards Philistra, for example on the sent renow sta twis actualed by a series of rocky debles, y are rifes. mencondaveled aranger than iltrochibise itil ofthe tresser has to restlered, to topics the relative state of a con-It says a tray to at the action the first to the terms of the t

1 - 1 1 - 1 1 - 1

dent that this occurred with no small number of the towns which had been given over on paper, as we should say, to the invading tribes, but which sloth or an unusually firm resistance, or the intervention of other motives of a more immediately urgent kind, had induced them to leave alone until a more convenient season.

It would almost appear as if David had made overtures to the inhabitants of this little city of some peaceful mode of acquiring possession, for we have their answer full of defiance and vain confidence. The message is confused in phraseology or has become so through defective translations. "Even the blind and the lame. He of this future capital, in one sense, of the world. Two hills, which are not much more mountains than are the seven hills of Rome, may be traced in profile from the higher ground on the other side of the valley of Himmon: The western hill rising to a point against the morning sun slopes downward, the modern wall marking the outline of the descent; then that line of defence rises to the summit of an angular platform on another eminence, square and bold, from whence the eastern slope falls abruptly, almost at one point a precipice, to the second valley below. Beyond this, inseparable, is the third hill of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range, the Mount of Ohyes, the standard of the little range of the standard of the little ra tentilly construction by the detailed and another detailed and another detailed and another detailed another western hill alone. The little town lay, as the towns of Judah still he, upon the side of the eminence, its little stronghold planted upon the height, its low houses elinging to the rocky sides, probably in many cases with a cave for the innermost room, and founded upon the ledges and layers of the living stone. They were so much higher it would seem, in civilisation then, than are the Arabs even of the present day who content themselves with much high plastered against the protecting slope—that

HE VAN THAN THAN THE STATE OF THE VALUE OF THE STATE OF T

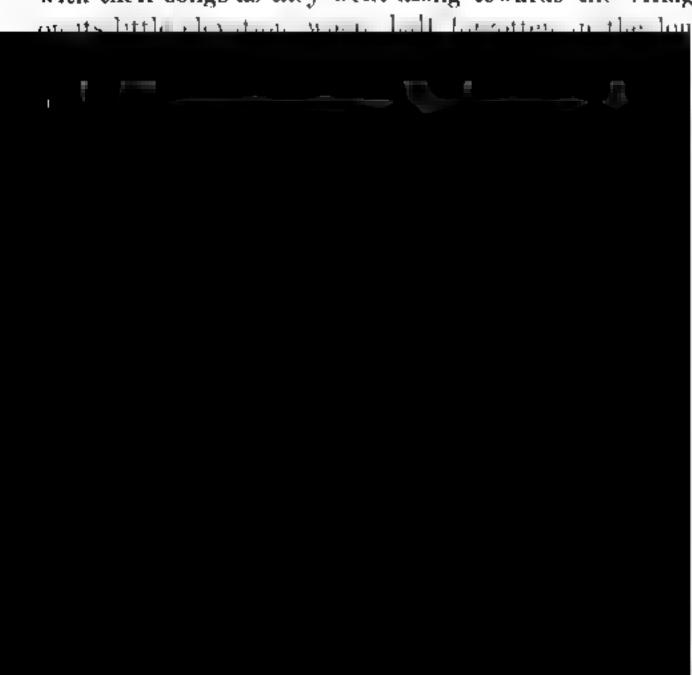

The first of the following solution of the state of the first of the state of the

upon the western slope looking towards Jerusalem, and that the farmer had placed his winnowing floor upon the height where all the winds would help him in his work, close by the rocky altar on which Abraham had made his sacrifice. There must have been so many rudely-built altars all about the country, that perhaps that traditional place was less remarked—or it might be that the farmer hoped it would bring him good fortune to thresh his corn near a sacred place. It must, however, again be noted that we know nothing of any ancient Jewish traditions as to this spot, which explains why it is that no mention of the sacred associations of Mount Versila and the sacred association and t dours unknown to Israel, was evidently enough for the race, whose mere physical necessities were so overwhelming, and who had to hold their own on every side against strong and watchful enemies. Nothing can be more deceptive than our calculations of policy as solely actuating such a movement. Had David not been moved by strong religious faith, and a boundless conviction that God was with him, and all things in the Divine hand, he never would have attained the position he now held; and it would be out of harmony with all that we know of him could we suppose that he was not himself the most fervent of the worshippers who filled the valley with their songs as they went along towards the village

JERUSALEM.

82

[CHAP.

these were probably old shrines either adapted from the surrounding nations or instituted hasfily to meet an everyday necessity. Kirjath-Jearin lies on a soft little knoll in the sunshine, its level lines of low houses surrounded by trees more luxurant than are usual in Palestine, its position especially peaceful and smiling—though so man the border line, where the herce Philistines must delight and excitement of the festival had made the crowd of followers almost forget what was the sacred occasion of their rejoicing: and by the time that the music and the rhythmic dance—those convolutions of almost solemn movement, which are so unlike anything that we know under the name of dancing—had reached the southern valley under the hill of Zion the wild excitement of the crowd had probably reached a climax. As we have no reason to suppose that natural causes are not used by Providence in all ages, it is legitimate, we think, to believe that the sudden death of Uzzah, who is said to have taken hold of the Ark to steady it, and thus say that we were "displeased" with what was recognised to be an act of God.

But this mood did not last. The king looked down from his fortress night and day upon the valley in which was hidden that sacred symbol; and as he came and went beheld on his way the empty tabernacle, the folds of the closed and vacant tent where he had meant to place the venerable token of God's presence with his people. It must have become a growing preoccupation, an eager longing and desire; indeed from this period the fixed idea of a House of God, more splended than any tent or tabernacle, seems to have taken possession of David's And then there came tales of how everything throve in the household of the man who had given to that sacred symbol the shelter of his roof, until by degrees the superstitious terrors were off, the project was taken up again, and the wish of the king's heart was temporarily fulfilled. A feast more joyous still than the former which ended in so much trouble, made the shout of the newly named Jerus view echo to the skies, is all the splendour of Israel, everything that the warlike people possessed of glittering armour and waying ensigns. and nearly ecloured relies, in the Erll rick vet hancory of lacs which is natural to the Pastago color of a the valley David had taken interest to a sector secretifically grafifed concept prisons sec-1 the characters in 1 a photo a brothers-in-arms: and all the commoner train that crowded after them. We have no clear information where it was exactly that Obed-edom and his sons wielded their flails, while the winnowing winds through the open shed drove the useless chaff away. But no corn would be threshed or labour of the field go on on that great day. All the way up to the city gates through the ravine, all gay with many coloured crowds, what a sight to see that procession wind!—the first of many wonderful sights, the beginning of the link which bound the lesser hill to the loftier, the throne of national worship to the throne of the house of David. And as the choirs

^{. .}

86 JERUSALEM.

CHAP.

"Who is the King of glory?
The Lord of hosts,
He is the King of glory."

The curious story which follows shows us from some window in the wall a woman looking out upon the approaching procession, a woman sad at heart, torn from her ancient surroundings, brought back perhaps to a husband whom she had ceased to love, expected to wear a face of joy at the establishment of a new kingdom over the rains of her father's house. Michal had loved David. and saved his life in the early days of their devotion. But since then years of trouble and change had elapsed and other loves had taken the place of that romance. She had been restored not without reluctance on her part, forced perhaps by the extraordinary manners of the time, brought back with weeping to find other women in DavaUs house and a crowd of children with whom she had nothing to do. Her heart, most like, was weary for an eccision to posts forth its bitteriess. And when Saul's prove daughter saw the new king leading that dence, diessel in the sounty white time of a prost with had no doubt been as superior to the vile motive which she attributed to him as are to this day many men on whom angry kinsfolk throw like aspersions—and answered indignantly: "I will yet be more vile than this, I will be base in my own sight," he cries—"It was before the Lord, who chose me before thy father, and before all his house." This altereation breaks painfully into the beautiful scene full of national devotion and sacred triumph, but embittered, as so often happens, by domestic discord. Michal had no child until the day of her death. She remained alone in the crowded household passionate and soured, she who had been the hero's first large. Let a large had no had been the hero's first

88

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

worthy of the age in which such sheer devotion was the ideal of the spotless character. And like the high hero of the poet's dream, the Arthur who never was by sea or shore, David whom we all discuss with so many disparagements, the ambitious, the schemer, the voluptuary—David received this proof of supreme devotion like the prince and poet he was. "My God forbid it me," he cries, "that I should do this thing: shall I drink the blood of these men that have put their lives in jeopardy? for with the jeopardy of their lives have they brought it." No drop of that precious cruse was for human lips. He poured it out before the Lord. Where unfolding drama, with its great rolls of story full within and without of lamentation and mourning. It is the common idea of humanity that its own extraordinary and incomprehensible being is in some sort the centre of the universe, an idea of which it would be impossible to disabuse the primitive mind, and which it is difficult even for the most fully informed to torego. We know that the stars are greater worlds than our own and that they are innumerable in their greatness, but still the inalienable poetry of nature compels us to see in them the lights that fill our nights with beauty, the spectators of our wayward courses. It may be that we are indeed the object of continual interest in this other way. The record of happiness is blank: the moving story, the eloquence, the poetry, even the keener flashes of delight, must all be the accompaniments of mortal distress. We can purclase the attention of the spheres in no other way.

An in Divid's case the time had now irrived of saccess and widespreading virtery. He of a are all the peoples round him, taking hor age and tribute from the Monortes and Phil states, and formulast int Danciscus, the move of trivial crediction of a case so have noticed at a case so have noticed at a factor of the factor of the case of the factor of the fact

Oran to the later to

^{1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1}

 $⁽b)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v & 1 \\ 1 & v & v & 1 \end{pmatrix} \quad (b)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v \\ 1 & v & v \end{pmatrix} \quad (c)_{k} = \begin{pmatrix} 1 & v & v$

e f t t t t t t

^{1 1,} t

^{1&}lt;sup>‡</sup> 1 , r ,

a t L

[•]

acy of David, and the great traders of Tyre, perhaps to divert his attention from their wealth, and the fact that they had no army on land sufficient to resist him, made haste to offer their friendship and their gifts and their skilful workmen to build the new king a palace worthy his great name. It was perhaps the first introduction of anything that could be called luxury into the spare dwellings of the hitherto but partially settled tribes; and the wonder must have spread through the little rocky city as the caravans arrived with their spoils, and the Tyrians with their loads of cedar; and the great hewn stones, Cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder of the cyclopean masses which still are the wonder.

der of the excusaters of the non-field, ontarily wer which already had shaped itself in his fervent imagination. Not for him, with blood upon his hands, was this great and crowning achievement of life to be. To the poet, framing in his mind all glorious things, who had already begun to muse and dream of the great walls, the fragrant portals of cedar, the wreathed work of the cornices and capitals, this was no doubt a terrible check and disappointment. Many years after when he unfolded his plans to his son Solomon, David described all the decorations which he desired to be carried out in the yet inbuilt Temple, with a sigh of unaccomplished desire. "All this," he said, "the Lord made me understand in writing by hand upon me," an expression in which there is all the pathos of a cherished hope unfulfilled.

When Nathan left him after this interview David entered into the tent where the Ark dwelt in solemn gloom under its curtains, and poured out his soul in thanks to God, who is deprouised to establish has house for ever

*Wile and O'Lord God? and Wile share is a first thou has so be gathered a arrow between this but established as a HA so H. O'Lo, Coll.

B. 1 > 1 - 1 - 1 specifies - 1 as a second of the state of the s had had his share of glory, the glory of great fame and honour and incalculable promotion, the renown of a great leader and ruler. He had established the dominion of Israel, and—crowning happiness in the eyes of an Eastern prince—he was thus proclaimed father of a neverending line of kings to be: but that Temple of his dreams, more glorious than was ever built with hands, that great psalm erected in everlasting stone and lined with gold and filled with music, that beautiful imagination was refused to him. To know that Solomon should do it, was no doubt a great thing: but yet a man's son, though dear, is not himself. His was the imagination, his the chief reproach of his life. By this time he had retired from the active conduct of the wars which were still going on all around under the generalship of the redoubtable Joab. David himself had been prevented by the strong remonstrance of his counsellors and the people generally from leading his own army as in former times "lest Thou queueli the light of Israel," and had yielded to that reasonable prayer; so that now "at the time when kings go forth to battle," a curious indication of the warlike habit of the nations round, "David sent Joab and his servants with him, and all Israel" to destroy Ammon, or whatsoever other work of the kind might be in hand. "And David sat in his house"-set aside, although on the complimentary argument that his life was too valuable to be risked; and dreamed of the I'mpb he was not to be allowed to build, and entered in a. The force of his matrice life and passions into the storm of hero decapt, from never so stact also with these whose active the less than one to a page

The est ten, those days he scriples in Isan as to polygian, in Deviawas at the neglect sity at terms of Hesses and rectangle of the second sites at the second sites and the second seco

P re e

11411

· 1.

· 1 1 1 · · ·

. . . .

t + t D +

1 , , , , ,

nored. David dared not, it would seem, risk such a scandal in his new capital, and to hide his guilt had recourse first to mean expedients and then to a bloody and desperate act. Failing in all attempts to seduce Uriah he sent to Joab in the field that commission of murder and treachery. "Set Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle." To be in the van is at all times a credit for a soldier, the post of honour, as of danger: probably Uriah was made to feel himself the selected champion, and so, let us hope, met his death gloriously with no consciousness of the shameful cause.

It is curious to remark that the uncompromising Joab, mination to satisfy all his desires. There was a hideous pause during which the wife of Uriah mourned for her husband, which seems to the reader an additional horror in the mockery of sorrow. But let us hope that Bathsheba knew nothing about the cause of his death, and that even the guilty satisfaction with which she must have felt that this event secured her own safety, would stir up compunctions in her mind and make the mournmg not all a pretence and mockery. To enter into the harem of the king in such circumstances would be not unattended by trouble we may be sure, to the woman whose story would be whispered with many a commentary from one to another by those free-spoken women of Israel, who, notwithstanding the bondage of polygamy, were never slow to express their opinions, even to their and Lansell But for David there was reserved a more er parti condemnation. The incident would have been swept (said, like so many small), nearlints in the lives et kings, jorlings word, in ver lave se rice a mention in the diron de, but for the Divine is not trut followel. It as M. Ream ! supposes the records of Dev. 's It is a the firm as out a control by 11 (

judge of Israel, bound to see right and justice administered everywhere, with his brief but tremendous indictment.

"There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds: but the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe lamb, which he had bought and nourished up: and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was to him as a daughter. And there came a traveller unto the rich man, and he spared to take of his own flock and of his own herd, to him as for the way forms must have some unto come, which is said to have followed. The loss of a new-born infant would seem but a small matter in that overflowing Eastern house, swarming with the sons of the king; yet no father of one sole hen and hope could have felt it more deeply than David appears to have done. As he lies on the ground in an agony of Lumiliation and prayer all the night through, beseeching God for the life of his child, absorbed and swallowed up in his penitence as he was before in his pleasure, the heart of the reader melts over the stricken man. His punishment was far from being over in the death of that innocent. Absalom lay before him in his way, and Amnon, and many a grief connected with his children: not easily or lightly was his expiation to be made, but no man, and still less any woman, who has passed through such a vigd, will refuse the tribute of sympathy to David. What was one little life among so many? but of each was it not possible that he was the chosen one, the seed of David who was to sit upon David's throne for ever? When all vos over, and be rose from Lis post atom in that cally which his astomished servads could not more st not those yords with will indicate it but well product december to the for Day ps la star at a so not The second of the total of the . tellle to tell a so les 1 ; 1 (4)

I caretste religione to the second of the se

¹

fit and the second of the

painful and revolting to our ears, of Amnon and Tamar, nor how it could be possible that a legitimate and permitted bond could exist between the son and daughter, even though by different mothers, of the same man. But the vengeance of Absalom is quite comprehensible, justifiable indeed according to every rule of that primitive period. It opens to us another glimpse of the economy of Israel and the manners of the time. It would seem that Absalom was in special favour with his father, one of the chief among the king's sons, to all of whom in his excess of parental love David was over-indulgent. His mother was a king's daughter, who must have eaught the reconstruction of the chief among the love David was over-indulgent.

children in their glory and joy of youth, than there was in that joy when possessed by ourselves. David must have turned back to his graver life with the smile and the blessing still upon his lips.

But very different was the return. Towards the evening while it was scarcely yet time to look for the homecoming of the revellers, a hasty post came wildly up the hill, with clang of hoofs and breathless shout of evil tidings—the king's sons all killed, the sheep-shearing turned into a carnage. Before it reached David the cry had become more definite. "Absalom has slain all the king's sons, and there is not one of them left." The king heard the cyl news and it would some definite.

panic to deceive the possible pursuer: and immediately there burst into the hall the frightened and breathless company of the young men who had left home so gaily. "They lifted up their voice and wept sore; and the king and all his servants wept " They were safe, but one brother was dead, and one fled with the stain of blood upon him. There would be among that distracted group some for Amnon and some for Absalom; the brother who had brought shame on the whole family and the brother who had avenged that shame so bitterly: but they were all probably very young and in their sudden terror unfit for anything but flight. And was it, perhaps, already floating through all minds that the foolish indulgence of David, who had not chastised the crime of the first, was thus to blame for the whole catastrophe? but on these points we can but conjecture, the record says nothing. Ammon was the firstborn of David's sons, and perhaps that distinction made it more difficult for him to visit one who was next to the head of the louse, and lell a cert aa right of authority over the ethers, with the pair ishmer the deserve? It was also no leabt, in addit, malmotive to Absolution whose heart the hear of solveedrational description of the second second the attribute the entries Taskethal ministrations alact term political less reind it it is a second of the s flourished to show what they could do to the king. The city throve, the kingdom increased in extent and order, the soldiers of Israel and their general returned to their homes in the stormy season, and went forth with their banners flying in the spring. The natural course and order of all things went on as before. But the King of Israel in his house of cedar, the palace that shone in the sunshine, was cheered neither by conquest nor tribute, nor by the vessels of gold and silver which he was laying up, nor the plans which he was drawing out for the future house of God. His heart was heavy for his children, not only for Amnon dead, but for Absalom in exile, whose gallant presence he missed at every point and tor court. But most likely nobody had taken the handsome youth seriously until that deed of blood which distinguished him still more effectually than his good looks and royal parentage, from among the crowd of his brethren—or indeed thought of that action now as anything but a well-deserved and not dishonourable revenge.

GALD OLA, P

Two years of humiliation followed during which Absalom, though permitted to inhabit Jerusalem, was not allowed to enter his father's house, or see his face, years which were no doubt more hard upon the king who loved his son than upon the son who was plotting how best to overthrow his father's throne. It is difficult to account for so long continued a punishment in this case.

his continual poring over those plans for the impossible Temple, his encouragement of foreign artists, tilling Jerusalem with useless dilettantism, taking the bread out of his warriors' mouths, would no doubt be the subject of many a lampoon, whispered from guest to guest, with bursts of profane laughter. Who was to carry out those plans and put away all that treasure from the use of those who were young and full of the faculty of enjoyment? Not Absalom one might be sure, who loved to have everything beautiful and splendid about him, and had all the royal instincts of magnificence which David, humbly born, directed to that dream of a house of God. And the people who loved David in reality, yet never can resist the influence of such jests, no doubt laughed too, pleased to make that harmless rebellion against constituted authority, and full of malicious hostility to the foreigners, the artists who would be closeted with the king for hours while even his own son was kept out. And all that was young and gov would collect about Absalora who had pleasure and advan eracut to bestew in the future and for the present a lively yenthed loose full of spect and orightness fisher of those something less of telepts, where a destriction 1 -1 -1 1

What the characters to be a second of the keylow of the condition of second of the keylow of the condition o

Ahithophel, the wisest of the Israelites, must have been already in it, though that great counsellor was not yet openly on Absalom's side. He made a practice of going out to the gate where it was the king's duty to sit in judgment and hear all the cases that were brought before him, placing himself in all his bravery, and with his gracious bearing, in the way of the litigants. It is implied though not said that David had become perhaps careless of this duty, came seldom to the seat of justice, was more and more preoccupied and absorbed, as it would be the policy of the plotters to represent, with that Temple of his, and his plan of hiding away for its future use or ornament all those trees are of gold and silver

JERUSALEM.

108

CHAP.

throne there. The rebel pleaded a vow which he had taken to perform sacrifices at Hebron, and received his father's permission to leave Jerusalem for that purpose with a strong following, all his own intimates and their trains, and two hundred men in addition who apparently formed the escort of the pretended pilgrims. Some time elapsed before it became known in Jerusalem what this expedition meant, and then we must suppose from his after conduct that it burst like a thunderbolt upon David, who had either been unaware of all that was happening, or had turned a deaf ear to any further accusation against his son after having been separated from him so long. The conduct of David seems unaccountable in this sudden and great emergency. Not a thought of resistance or the tauntenance of his own right seems to have been in him, nothing of the spirit of the old warrior. It is true that Le was dready an old man, but that does not seem to account for the complete collapse, not only of power, but of spirit, in Line. The first thoughts in his mind when he heard that his son was in open revelt were these of ter or accombinission in Arise, and I trus floor for we I Unitate superfrom Absil and specified prid I thought by assadded that I go a cr and at the city with the last of the ete so policero, technica to S. I' the and the state of t process for the second ı

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

m.]

out of the old warrior and all his courage? Was it those 109

III.]

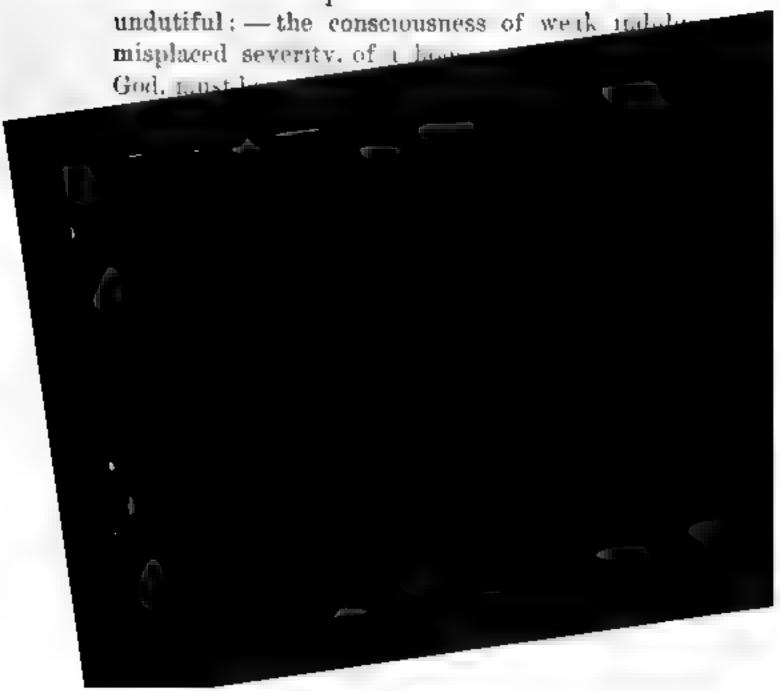

His sanction and guardianship. How could a guilty wanderer flying from the vengeance that had been denounced upon him lay that flattering unction to his soul? It seems to have brought a faint glimmer of hope, however, into his mind to see the sacred symbol and feel that the sympathies of the priests were with him; for a thought of coming back breaks in now for the first time into his despair. "Carry back the Ark of God into the city," he says. "If I find favour in the eyes of the Lord, He will bring me again, and show me both it, and His habita-cannot but remember how often in after days He who was the Son of David passed over that brook, going to His sacred meditations in the garden, or coming back to the cross and the grave.

"David went up the ascent of Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went barefoot: and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went." This was evidently more than a mere flight: it was a penitential procession, a confession of the halfforgotten sins for which now, at last, retribution had come. He was going back to those old haunts where his troubled youth had been spent; and he remembered his errors and bowed his head before that justice which Lad tarried long but never had forgotten. It might have been said of David as it was of Job-had he served Godfor no edit? What promotion had been given to him, what presperity, what glory's "I have seen the wickedfloaris alike a green bey tree 1. How ars own works, the itternices of his prosperous and gloricus divs. must have peuted back apon lisa in laste whit but bereing. II Tr. Artidepstjage Libert med is server me le lavet, albila, 1 1 + ner la diterra vert, to est sedit to the second of the second state of part to store and 1, 1 , 11 s prosperous years: but God had not forgotten it. Wha else but this could have taken the heart out of the old warrior, the mighty man of valour? We all remembe against him the death of Uriah: but few take any account of the stricken father, the fugitive king, the self humiliated penitent, his head bowed under the veil o mourning, his feet torn upon the stony ways, his glory departed from him, and most of all his son turned agains him, his son whom he loved. Not only the death of Uriah, but many an error besides was no doubt in David' mind, and that sense of supreme failure which is so bitte in the heart of a parent whose children are unkind and undutiful. The consciousness of weath well-kenness.

11

and when the mournful party came to a halt, the liberal succours afforded both by friends and former enemies—the King of Ammon among others, with generous forget-fulness of old feuds, sending supplies to the camp—must have softened the first sensation of unmitigated distress, as the necessity for exertion in itself and the experience of every new event must always do more or less. David was still so self-abased in his keen consciousness of Divine chastisement, that he would permit no vengeance to be taken upon the vulgar abuse of Shimei who threw stones at him as he passed. "Behold, my son seeketh my life; how much more now may this Benjamite do it?" he says as he passes on.

In the meantime a terrible scene was being enacted in Jerusalem, one of insult and affront to the king, which is naconceivable to modern minds, not to speak of indistribual shame and horror, which is never taken account of it all in any parative rood. The districted city had not stopped its weeping for David when Absalem and I is tamically charged to stop as it making the valls ring with the risk of the scene for the is not are as the contract of the scene for a second taken and the contract of the scene for a second to the scene for the scene for a second taken and the scene for a second taken at the contract of the scene for a second taken at the scene for a s bility of forgetting that any one is injured, in the satisfaction of restored brightness and triumph. And the throng would surge on after him, pushing up the streets, pouring out of every house, towards the palace which stood vacant in the guardianship of those ten poor women—empty for any man to seize and take possession of it. One wonders whether that dark counsellor by Absalom's side, a mere speck among the bravery of the brilliant train, had wrongs or slights to avenge against David who knew his force, at least, whether he had employed him or not? or if it were mere cold wisdom and policy which dictated his advice?\(^1\) Ahithophel was own house and his people was all that Absalom wanted. But now that he was undeceived there was no indulgence in Joab's heart. Had he been a man of policy alone we might imagine that the certainty that Absalom so long as he lived would be a standing danger to the crown, was what moved him most: but though his strong sense made that too apparent to him, Joab had thus more poignant reasons still for being remorseless towards Absalom who had deceived him.

^{. .}

¹

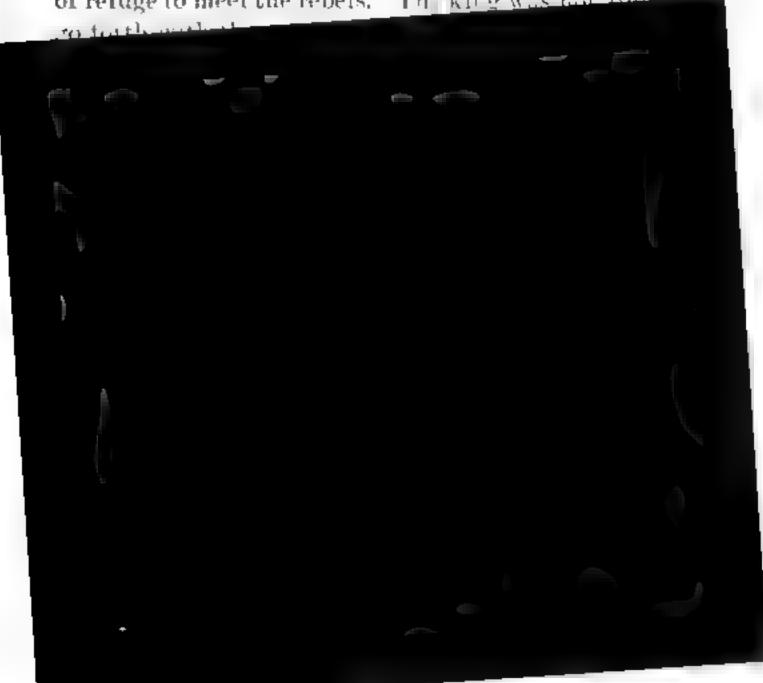

^{• 1}

Nothing could be more vivid, or more touching, than the picture of the setting out of the forces from their city of refuge to meet the rebels. The king was not along the

that if he found that dainty gallant in his way there should be short shrift. Thus the army went forth to the battle.

And David "sat between the two gates." He was still the light of Israel, not to be risked in such a conflict, and perhaps his heart was too faint with the unuatural struggle, to seek a point of vantage whence he could see the approach of the messengers or the far-off dust of the battle. He sat where he could catch the first runner from the field, and hear the first news, but not see, perhaps, the rush of fugitives retiring, perhaps his son dragged hither a prisoner. When the watchman called out from above that some one was visible on the way and that his running was like that of Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, the king in his anxiety answered that his news must be good for he was a good man; but it was not Ahmanz, but the blunt Cushi, the other Levite whom Joah, not loving him it would seem, had charged with that due news, who fold it. David did not ask what was the issue of the fight, he said, "Is the young Fig. Ms. let is ite?" What did kit glor or crown matto antist whitemorent as an 1 see Are, how to a last oka in electrication at each ner of the solution to the local test Charter of the scall of a so the court on a contract 1 (] lace the flee O Assessment is Here is a second of the first of son!" This was the cry that the returning victors heard as they came back triumphant to the gates of the city, where, no doubt, the scared and sorrowful people were standing about, wrung to the heart by that outcry. The music stopped, the warriors huddled together, feeling, each man, as if he were a murderer. They broke out of their ranks and "gat them by stealth into the city, as people being ashamed steal away when they flee in battle." Nothing could be added that would not diminish the wonderful effect of such a description. The day sat in the gate, and received the captains who came before hun, discouraged, with drooping crests, and such of the warriors as had not dispersed already, half indigmant, half sorry to their homes. All that he could do to make up for his momentary failure it is clear that he did, but probably with but partial effect. And it is equally clear that Joab, never beloved, was in disgrace from that day. No doubt David heard of the personal share he had in the slaying of Absalom, and resented doubly on this account the abrupt disturbance of his seclusion by the very man who had struck the blow. He made overtures to Amasa, who had been Absalom's general, with some thought of policy perhaps, but assuredly more in bitterness and deep resentment. He would have nothing more to say to those sons of Zeruiah, who had always been as thorns in his flesh. When Amasa fulled him, or seemed to tail, on a later occasion. it was to Abishar, the less import out brother that not to Joah, whom Davil turied. But it was a Cleng before that determined man regarded, in his us all and impuleus way by ble ished and for e, the countril which was evid next last by right of notice. Which is to feel to at a possible of the contract of the c pit so at grac

111.]

Decrease steelers, at Kernett, with the profile of the first profile of the state o

tress. His conduct to Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, whom he had protected all his life is less creditable: he had made a hasty promise of all that his master possessed to Ziba, the steward of Mephibosheth, who had hurried after him on his flight with provisions for the retinue, and a false story of his master's hopes of recovering the kingdom. When the lame prince came hurrying out to the gates to meet the king, David—his heart heavy no doubt as he approached that fateful place where such orgies had been held in his absence, where Absalom had flashed through his brief reign of a day, where all the events of that brilliant young life, which Perhaps it gave him a little ease to thrust poor Mephibosheth from him, Mephibosheth who had understanding, who did not insist, but fell back from the path of the careless cruelty practised by Absalom, and by almost every usurper, the last affront that could be offered to a deposed monarch without any consideration of the immediate victims; and on the next find a woman negotiating for her city, describing herself with the confidence of an assured superiority as "one of those who are peaceable and faithful in Israel." "A mother in Israel." The same anomaly, however, still exists in the East. It is no doubt an instance of the great power of individual character in the primitive conditions of life.

There are other details of David's life into which we can scarcely enter. His conduct to the house of Saul had been bother than the conduct to the house of Saul made his people great, he welded the tribes together as never had been done before, and made a united kingdom of the differing clans and districts which had been so apt each to fall into a little local centre of its own. He turned the little Jebusite city into a capital, distinct in the history of the world, and to be renowned through all time. It was he in whose fertile mind first rose the conception of that great Temple, which was one of the marvels of the ancient world. And whatever the caviller and critic may say in the uncertain, often mistaken, constantly superseded suggestions of their science, which at the best cannot be more than conjecture, there can surely be no evidence half so weighty as the tradition of his race and the internal witness of these noble poems, against his character as a poet. After thousands of years even his words, the expressions of feeling which belong to his life rather than to his works, his wail for Absalom, his remonstrances with Saul come to our lips still as the express on of our deepest chaot case. And no other poet, not even Slakespeare, has entered so deeply into the hearts of all men. The rice of name and less nocks sidered to beas he" for all ties of the second second nated by the street of the same of the same the set Elifest is their to be alls, l, s thellessi 1 (1) c at at 1 s rı I Ta I + 11 not have to the opening the aspost leaders P. I. Starting transfer 1 (, sl = 1 / s = 1 stras in the state and the second second unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge, are to us as they were to the ancient singer, the lamps of heaven, the lights of this little earth—of which we are not more sure in our advanced knowledge that it is but an atom in boundless space, than he felt it to be in his sublime ignorance when he cried in the midst of that overwhelming glory "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" What Newton, what Herschel could say more?

Thus said David, if the evidence of the most carefully preserved records in the world are not altogether without truth: and if, what is more infallible still, the indications of the literal criticism to the truth to make the whom his own familiar friend, his almost father in one case, his favourite son in the other, had turned. In both cases that quick overwhelming movement and sudden despair has something cowardly in them to our more self-restrained and impulse-concealing race.

But it is this very play of feeling which makes him so full of attraction, so supreme in the affections of his surroundings, that the historian translates his charm and fascination of nature by that superlative phrase. His life is a poem from beginning to end, not a point in it which does not touch the spectator. His early youthful imaginative valour, that quintessence of boyish daring which translated the spectator.

increased which is the street food to the show

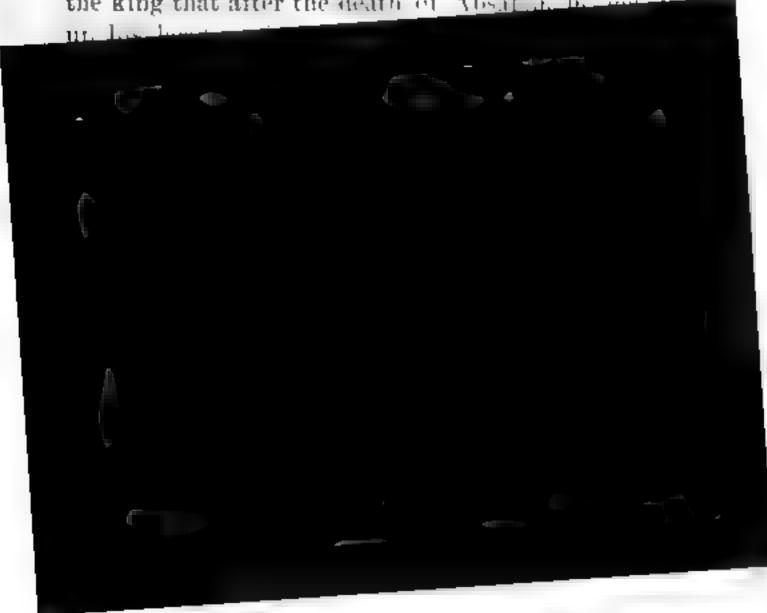

[CHAP.

m.]

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

131 of a cornice; or arranging with Asaph and his men the service that was to be, the chorus and antiphon, the adagio and allegro of the music, and how to fit to its primitive strain the verses which critics tell us are so rude and ill-adapted for music, of his primitive Hebrew—which nevertheless must have been the best Hebrew going in that day or long after, as it has ranked among the noblest poetry going through all the centuries since then. But a chill would seem to have come over that bright spirit in his later years. It is no strain of the imagination to believe that it was said in Jerusalem of the king that after the death of Abad as he was a strain of the later that after the death of Abad as he was a said in Jerusalem of

JERUSALEM.

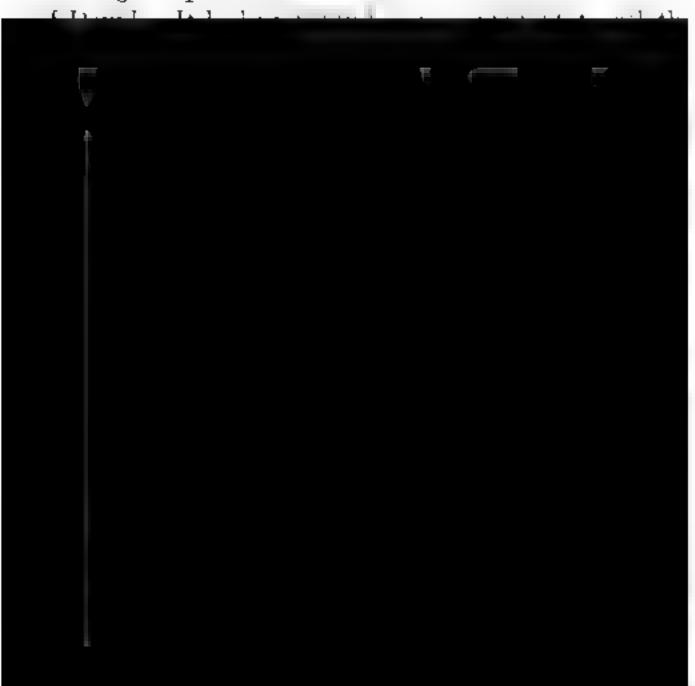

[CHAP.

- "In Him will I trust,
 Ite is my shield,
 And the horn of my salvation,
 My refuge, and my tower,
- "I will call upon the Lord, Worthy to be prused So shall I be saved from mine enemies,
- The waves of death compassed me about, The floods of angodly men Made me afrail.
- The sorrows of hell compassed me about, The socres of death Stood or my way;
- "In my distress I called upon the Lord, And cried unto my God: And He heard my voice, And no cry entered into His ears."

If we assed mine enemies, and destroyed them, I. a his model them and wounded them Yer text of the collection of a tyle to the little state of a state of the collection of th

With such strains as these the Levites answered to each other in their companies, and the harps and the psalteries thrilled the air, while the king in his high place, and the warriors fresh from battle stood by, and the concourse of the women, a many-coloured crowd, moved and murmured through the courts outside, around the folded curtains which concealed the Ark, the symbol of God's protecting presence and of so many victories past. But David though he gave expression to this cry of triumph went back mirthless to his house with death in his heart.

One great public ceremonial still remained in the life

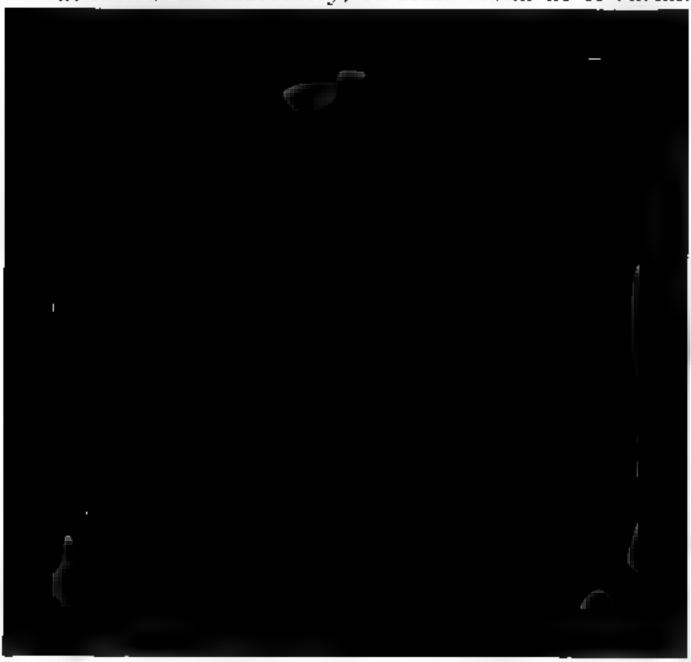

princes of Israel, the princes of the tribes, and the captains of the companies that ministered to the king by course, and the captains over the thousands, and the captains over the hundreds, and the stewards over all the substance and possessions of the king, and of his sons, with the officers, and with the mighty men, and with all the valuant men, unto Jerusalem " He called together, as we should say, the great officials of the kingdom, his ministers, the heads of departments, his privy-councillors and officers in high command, the great men of the nation, with the military element preponderating as was natural—and presented to them his young son, most probably to the great surprise of many, and no doubt to the dismay and confusion of the elders of the Lumby, and especially of Adomjah who was now to in them, after the death of Absalom har at would seem to have felt that an explanation was and the state of the lose to address that a miles to remined them love to buaselt hid been selected for the revel degrate, that all delight elesen to be the role and of the non-sent darid, the base of his tree each the sesonal literal Heal, director

. 1 ' (

. I the term of term of term of the term of the term of term of term of term of term of term of term o

. 1 1 5

and his disappointment, and the promise that had been made to him: and the object had become a national one, kept always before the inhabitants of Jerusalem and the provincial visitors to the capital by the immense preparations which David was making, the hewing of the great blocks of stone, the carvings which were intended for the interior, the treasures of gold and silver which were laid up for the decoration of that wonderful place. Jerusalem must have been pervaded with the odour of the cedar which was measured and piled up in masses of fragrant planks and pillars: and throughout all Israel the women must have been at work wherever there was one who was skilful in embroidery, on some vestment or curtain the depths of the country, what encouragement to every industry, what comfort to every heart! "I will give him rest from all his enemies round about: I will give peace and quietness to Israel in his days: for his name shall be Solomon." It was in itself a promise and assurance to make the harassed land rejoice.

When the king had made this oration he showed to his assembled counsellors the preparations he had made, the masses of hewn stone all ready for the building, the treasury full of precious metals, the jewels, onyxes and glistening "stones of divers colours" and marble in abundance, and gold to overlay the walls of that precious house that was to be. He showed them what had been the work of all his later life, his collections of every kind, the results of endless labour and thought. fired as they must have been by the sight and by his glowing words, and invitation to all to take their part in this gleat national undertiking, the princes and the chiefs breaglt in their turn what yer they had that was precioes to add to the stere, ewels to doubt from many a some, take i frem the needs of many respitye, carpets of glorous coloris, crab order, es a say which the well to I spett, the self-site werks after lifter letter be a site steps the asset that has been been 1 5 1 7 4 4 5 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 11, 1, 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 kingdom as his advancing age permitted: and then came that pause which occurs continually in every history, the interval of every day between the past and future, which happily has no record, which is only our human life.

Almost the last stage of all seems to have been reached in David's life, when another sudden disturbance came upon the capital, dispersing the somewhat heavy and ominous calm which hung over it, the weary suspense of an ending life. David was old, shut up in his chamber under the charge of his young nurse, unable for the weight of sovereignty, and rarely seen, we may believe, in the city of which he was the life and pride: and all men had grown weary of the watting, the passe in those as well as that of the nation, to set aside the foolishness of his old age, and establish a successor after him who should follow the old conquering traditions, and continue the old warlike life. What was this boy Solomon that he should be chosen from among the lowest ranks of the family, over the head of the gallant prince who was the true hear? Abiathar was of the same mind, the priest who had been faithful to David through all his troubles, who had been with him in the wilderness, and among the Philistines, sharing all the evil as well as the good of his life. It is very probable that even among the priesthood there were two parties, one maintaining that a tabernacle for the Ark was all that God had ordained, that the Temple was but a dream, and all the silver and gold more fit to be divided among the chiefs and people than to be appropriated to this visionary use. To what purpose is this waste? Probably both Joab and Abiathar conceived that it would be fir more to the glory of Israel. to diffuse such weath in engine people that to ac uninlate tim this meighter, and a restorit from the use of in will old r to appropriate at to the total fill, to whom it was, strast of the Arabic resthe entry and the street of the street hats the police to the companies the

m.] THE HOUSE OF DAVID. - 139

seems to have been more than seventy which is hy no

had abdicated, the fortunate prince who was to build the house of God, and make Israel glorious; and while the fading fire lasted gave him a few fierce brief counsels, hot and butter with that anger of old age which is all the more strong that it has no longer any personal potency. All that Jo ib had done came before him in a flash of augry recollection, the death of Abner, the death of Amasawho can doubt, above all, the death of Absalom. "Do thou therefore according to thy wisdom, and let not his head go down to the grave in peace." Was this charge so dreadful as appears to us? Joab had served David well, but he had never admitted any obstacle to his private vengeance, and he was the most dangerous foe that young Solomon could have while yet unassured upon the throne. That there should have come into the old king's mind arton this has own bitter enemy and reviler, the Benjamite, who had thrown jibes and enises and stones at him on his thight from derus derivisie is a pre-difficult to understant. Par as the recollection flatted coross his feiling mudicate temperary tex when the notice of Joan had rused. He had forgiv it Shower it older tel to stain set, be the dieset as it in teal as he set by

.

1 1

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

Here is a softer recollection, with which to take leave of the hero, the song with which the words and the days of the son of Jesse came to an end. "Now these be the last words of David"—the young king, his eyes full of ardour and of melancholy, the newly anointed, the great thinker and poet of days to come, sitting thoughtfully by.

"He that ruleth over men should be just, Ruling in the fear of God.

III.]

- "And he shall be as the light of the morning, When the sun riseth.

 A morning without clouds;
- "Like the tender grass out of the earth

CHAPTER IV.

SOLOMON.

THE traditionary character of Solomon, the greatest potentate and philosopher of the East, the man above all others who has influenced the development of that vast world of sentiment, passion and thought which the passage of centuries has scarcely made more comprehensible to us, the world of the smalle Jew and the dreamy, yet fieree Mohammedan was as different from that of his father as can well be imagined. In such wonderful figures there is certainly no heredity. How the warrier of the desert, the shepher I of the hills and valleys, the paladin and hero of romance who was his predecessor, could have produced that man of observation and thought, that great spectator of the ages, who was at the same time so great an actor on the far distant and crowded stage that it is difficult to conceive how little Judea could have contained him-is beyond the imagiuntion of man. He rises in that dim distance the firstborn of all the philosophers, arriving at conclusions which the latest have done little more than carry out, the first great thinker, whose musings have breathed through the who e would reither correct I nor ic. and all elete by all advancing fore or meanism, wise and making What progress that it or a smaller star then " los dringes are all car constants, there is no comparison between the circumstances of well-being which surround

CH. IV.] THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

143

history and invented, to their own glory, a whole line of visionary kings: but how far are they behind the splendid fictionists (according to the critics) who flourished nameless among those primitive Jews! for Scots historians put no immortal poetry into the mouth of their fabulous Fergus, no essence of human wisdom to the credit of any Achaius. Solomon and his philosophy, and David and his Psalms on the contrary are rooted among the deepest certainties of the wide Eastern world to take. Adonijah's guests, in all their bravery, had gone by but a few hours before to the great feast in the valley which the splendid heir-presumptive, the legitimate successor, was giving—and what was this young prince, the man of peace, undistinguished yet by either valour or greatness?

The crowd must have gathered dumbly after him, pouring down to the door of the tabernacle. But when the priest came out from within the mysterious curtains with the consecrated oil, and in the sight of all men anomted the grave young king, a sudden enthusiasm would seem to have seized the crowd. The sound of the

Block of the United Street and the Street

JERUSALEM.

146

[CHAP.

salem looking on, that this new king though a man of

The burning flesh was a sweet savour unto the Lord. Close examination, however, shows that the amount thus consumed was comparatively small, so that, perhaps, the trial to the, in this respect not very keen, perceptions of the East, might not have been nearly so great as we

IV.]

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

accumulation of industries must have been going on for years during the reign of David, who had set the masons to work to hew the stones, and "prepared iron in abundance for the nails, for the doors of the gates and for the joinings, and brass in abundance without weight"—not to speak of the designs minutely prepared, and the calculations of quantities and values required. How far we may trust to the numbers and statements of weight it would be difficult to say, for nothing is so likely to have suffered in the course of innumerable transcriptions as these details, which in many cases, and especially in the successive numberings of the people, seem inconceivably future manipulators of European finance had found out the way of exchanging the productions of their vassals, the Gibeonites and Jebusites, who laboured the fields and worked the winepress and crushed the oil-berries for them, for the manufactures of the trading Tyrians, and

151

est raid, expanded in one generation into a great city enlarged and beautified towards which the wealth of the

with a sigh for the good old times, when his own Jebusite chief held the little town, and all was silence around: and so, too, must have thought the group of old soldiers who would look out, contemptuous, upon all those arts of peace, and remind each other of the stirring trumpet notes when great Joab, now dead and gone, or greater David, had called them together and led them down, with clang of sword and shummer of spear, down into the plain to victory and spoil

But while these old Conservatives had their grumble apart, what robust life must have poured through the land where everybody was busy, what commotion and activity in all the streets! Solomon, the young king, had other tastes than his father. He made a splendid alliance with the greatest of ancient kingdoms, bringing Pharaob's diughter to his palace on the hill, not contenting himself with any wayside beauty as his father had done—Pharaoh's diughter, a descendant of the race wheel hall names shows of large, and whom he is suffered so sor below can self that strange, are a corrected by proph "What he are produced done the new position of linear and the first produced done the new position of linear and the first produced done the new position of linear and the first produced done the new position of linear and the first produced done the new position of linear and the first produced done the new position of linear and the first produced done the new position of linear and the first produced done the large that the large produced done is the state of linear large that the large produced done is the state of large produced done the large produced done in the large pr

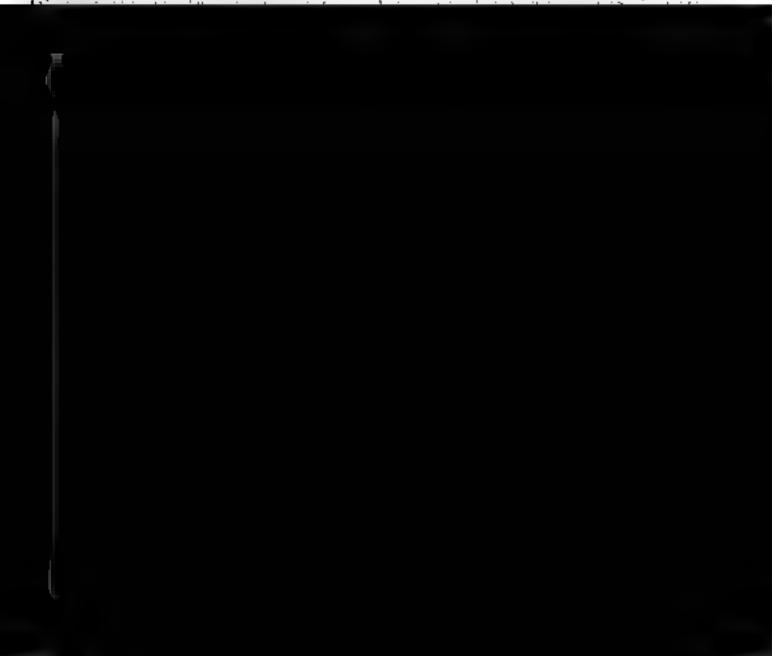

.

, 1

1

+

slowly growing in whiteness and noble proportion like a magic dwelling. The great stones must have been dragged up the hill with shoutings and outcries of men, and labouring breath of animals taking their share, they, too, in their voiceless way, in the offering, but once there, were poised, without noise of building, one upon another in their courses without sound of the hummer or any tool. It would become the first idea in the morning with all that highly-stimulated and excite t people to look cut and see how and hid because the first idea in the previous twenty-four hours, what new a crown hid be one visible, what sculptured hitel ad a hor wing of chards, corner of the hill, and deep down in the valley the old, old group of hoary trees which mark Gethsemane, that spot full of awe and anguish. But no such knowledge was in the mind of the lighthearted groups which must have leant over to see the huge courses of new-laid stones, the men explaining, the women wondering as in any holiday expedition of to-day. These blocks of deep-of stones, the cargoes of wood from Jaffa, all the ruder labours necessary. The number of these original inhabitants, sometimes holding their own in spurts of little wars, as the Jebusites had held their town against David, sometimes tolerated and linked by bonds of familiarity and neighbourhood with the conquering race, never so oppressed as were, for example, the Saxons by the Normans, man. Neither mules nor camels could carry conveniently the great logs of cedar, still less drag forth the blocks of Stone from the quarries, therefore it must in some cases have been by sheer hard labour of scores of men that the transport was accomplished. All this heavy work would seem to have been laid upon the tributaries, the aborigines of the country. "Of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen," but the Amorites, Hittites, Perrizites, Hivites, and Jebusites were levied en masse for this forced service. The corvée would lose its unpopularity when thus exacted from the natural vassals, and it does not appear that any rebellious sentiment arose among those labouring crowds. The Israelites filled their places of overseers and captains, and they were sent to Lebanon, to the wood-cutting, in relays, their period of service being one month in three.

How for all this quickened life and increase of work and activity was to the real advantige and enrichment of the land, Lowever, it is very difficult to be a a - A splendid capital is a glory to a weal established and steafastly governes kingdom. Intal is deaptful whether the Israeiit's were sufficiently timed indicational to approprie it of all later stated at 17 % , None t to the set end for December to the " I I I I NO I 1 11 5 1 5 1 1 1 Ji thesker 1 + 1, 1 , 1 + + , , 1 1

Yet control of

must have caused a thrill of life and mutual acquaintance through all the tribes as it went and came, with its new experiences, so much to tell of Jerusalem on one hand, and of the mountains on the other: not to speak of the wonders of the caravans from Egypt, the reports of the shipmen who went so far into fabulous lands across incredible seas. The country folk must have looked for the passing of that train with all the excitement of rustics to whom a glimpse into other worlds is thus afforded periodically. It is said in our own days that nothing has so welded the newly formed kingdom of Italy into one, as the military service which carries the Neapolitan into the section with and took the section of the record does not enter into these details. The voyages themselves are wonder enough, the earliest record of extended trading and the navigation of the unknown seas. And even the briefness of the statement adds to its interest. What strange novelty, unknown to us, who have so little left to surprise us, what excitement must have been in that vague blundering about those brilliant seas, what tragic experiences of cyclone and tempest, what loitering in strange places, waiting upon wind and weather, in the long, long wandering of those three 161

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

162

ıv.]

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

165

Colomon ? Those to whom those notantates of the an

JERUSALEM.

166

wealth for their sakes, but never once as in this case to give up to them the dearer fame of poem or work of genius. Such a piece of self-effacement is unknown to any other language, to any race that ever existed. No Greek gave the credit even of a ballad to the tyrant of his state, or cut off his own name from the admiration and knowledge of posterity in order to give fictitious glory to his master. On what inducement the poets of Judea in the dawn of consciousness should have done so, why they were so far different (being so curiously like in other particulars the most tenacious and self-seeking of men) to all other human beings, is too deep a question for the ordinary intelligence. We prefer to receive them, as at least from the inspiration of Solomon, whether they may have been written out or not, by his own hand. We are told that "he spake" of many things upon which his utt rinces have perished beasts and birds, and trees and plants. The bottiny and natural history, curious as they would have been, we an do without. The greater

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

ıv.]

the temporary extranorments the mutual adoration of 16

JERUSALEM.

168

CHAP.

"How shall I your true love ken From another one"

The sentiment is universal and runs through all the ages. He is the chiefest among ten thousand and of her she is but one, the choice one of her mother. "there is none like her, none." Sometimes she is even terrible in her beauty "like an army with banners" to the adoring lover. The Jerusalem that comes vaguely into sight behind these two beautiful figures is settled and orderly, the slopes of its hills covered with gardens, its inner economy safe and sure :- beyond its walls, stretching out in the valleys, lie pleasant fields full of vines and pomegranates and appletrees: the rural paths are sweet with flowers, blies above all, of which it was said a thousand years after, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these: a delightful link of association between that far-distant scene and the past, less remote, which is so much more momentous and dear. The great singer who made the seng may not have be a Solomon, it may have been out of pure levilty to enhance his monach's name that he allowed it to be attainated to Solomon, or there may be errited in a stangaparthe relief to the dof as itte in a charattimes differences in oleand a broweds. But it is a contrate in a ter terms to the second articular to the state of the state a f $x = \frac{1}{x} \cdot \frac{1}{x} \cdot$ stands on the eminence of maturity and experience, has by his own showing sought with ardour all the triumphs and pleasures of life, and tasted every joy, and fathomed every sweetness. Such a man of all others is most like to have expanded himself at once in the refinements and the ardours of sentiment, and could scarcely have fallen into the monotonous garbage of so-called pission during that youth of genius and high aspiration "feeding among the likes" which was capable of so much finer things. He had now seen the emptiness of all. Romance had died out from him: his Shalamite had become like other women, his Egypt'an princess a fellow creature moved with like this like and as like at the like of the same like other women.

170

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

COLLES GATE.

ıv.]

or destitution below. Whether there had never been any others whether they had been swent out of his house by

174

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

IV.] THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

175

—has not perceived till now that the work and labour were the joy, and not the always imperfect, never accomplished end. To rejoice in his labour because God answereth him in the joy of his heart! Here is the one thing that is not vanity. It is in the happiness of making, of producing, of exercising all the faculties that God has given, of conceiving in his heart and working out with his hands the work which he loves. A smile comes even upon that sorrowful face at the thought of the working days, the peaceful evening of rest, the awaking to all the joys of active life. No more beautiful picture of the cheerful tenor of the common life, the was more happy than he who accomplished everything. But yet Solomon would not have had this revelation had not he, too, recollections of the fulness of his career, when he worked with all his might at whatsoever his hand found to do, and rejoiced in his labour, and found every day too short for the work that filled it. How little he had thought of that in his eager pressing towards the end, towards the result! Yet it was his

that is not vanity: that a man should take pleasure in the doing of his work: that he should rejoice in his 178

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

IV.] THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

179

his choice, the most delicate homage that could be ren-

the idolatries that seem to have had at all times so many attractions for light and unwary spirits. The Jewish priests and conservators were like those reformers who looked on with angry and jealous eyes at the royal chapel in which the foreign queen had to be permitted to hear her mass, whatever reasons there might be against it. The reasons were infinitely stronger on the side of the Jews. But with Solomon, who probably looked on all those clinging dependents round him with a certain contempt as far too slight creatures to affect any man except for the fleeting moment of their beauty and empire over his senses—it is not difficult to understand the facility with which he might be persuaded to provide for each

Astarte herself meaning nothing more terrible even to

1V.]

by acclaim, a conclusion in which he has simply forestalled every generation of his successors, and all the wise men who have followed him. But this, too, is the burden of Solomon, not less emphatic:—that the joy of life is in the doing: that the gift of God is that satisfaction which lies in a man's work and the exercise of his faculties: that he who does with all his might what his hand finds to do, is the happy man. The sage and the fool, alike, hurry over that wholesome happiness of the daily round, despising it, looking for something better, for some pitiful result, some poor achievement which is to make them demigods among men. And

CHAPTER V

THE KINGS OF JUDAH.

THERE could be no more tremendous comment upon that conclusion of Solomon's philosophy than the history of his own house and kingdom. The life of this great prince was wholly occupied in building up and assuring the monarchy which his father had founded, He had entered upon an inheritance full of emburiassment and care, with an elder brother in semi-rebellion, and the great chief of his army, the head of all will like enterprise in Israel opposed to him-while h mself still young, untried, upon the top of that wave of fickle popular enthusiasm upon which no one can calculate for more than a moment. He had upon his shoulders as his chief charge, his raison d'être, so to speak, the building of that great Temple which, no doubt, was to many a devout imagination, and of which, perhaps, very few foresaw the future importance as the one centre and rallying ground for the national spirit and heart. Solomon had before bun the tremendous task not only of building that Temple, but of making it accepted of the people-the distant traces who acknowled, dahis sway, but knew nothing of his decusalencial divided the restriction ite shines and drais, and hely of drains a 1 the count v. and perlaps various essets continued ticlisation of worship. This yeak, is in person so much great national work, besides the glory and joy of

186 JERUSALEM. [CHAP.

extraordinary inconsistency is, however, even less amazing than the possibility of a downfall of the kind in such

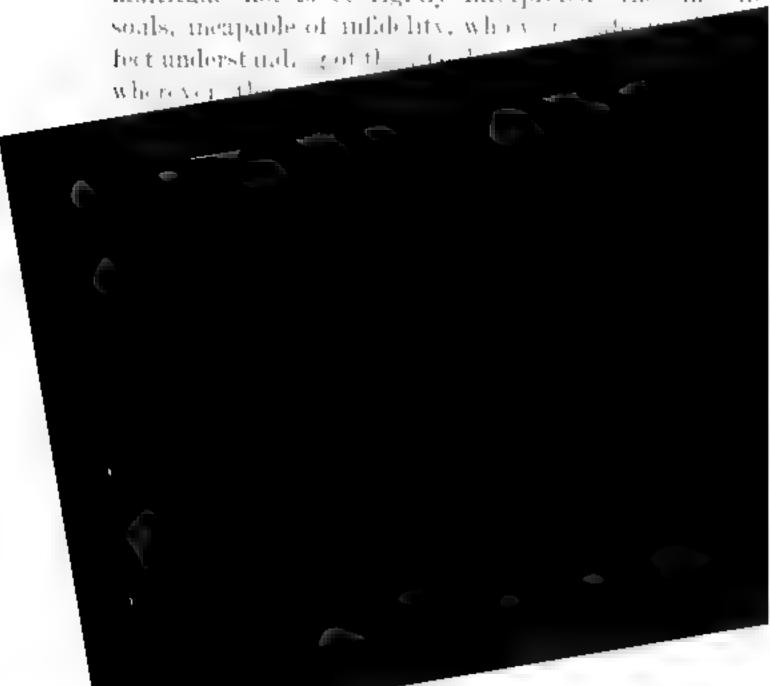

v.]

industries, the work in Lebanon, the pressgang, perhaps, to enter into the troubled and often confused story which is in many respects the most like a collection of legends strung upon a spare thread of history of anything in the Scriptures. The story of the prophets Elijah and Elisha contained some of the finest and most picturesque scenes and some of the most rude and trivial. Nothing can exceed the majesty of the lonely figure in the desert, his head wrapped in his cloak, his soul enveloped in darkness, who stands before the great invisible God through thunder and earthquake in an extraordinary mingling of submission and defiance, with a proud desolation and sense of abandonment which is a reproach to his Maker, "I, I alone am left":-neither is there anything more wonderful in those ancient records than the still small voice which is the voice of God, nor that which it says, a statement so unexpected, an answer which cuts the very ground from the feet of the self-absorbed and selfasserting prophet. "Act have I seven thousand mach in Israel who have not bent the knee to Baal '. Human tolly and faithlessness in the midst even of heroic sufformg and solitude, confronted with the great calm, and knowledge of all secrits which are in the father, ass cerse is tess of the Divane, were a verticor exposit by er constitutional satisfaction and the same state of the same the time becommended while ich shist in so ekteratios pir vilviles al so laçor the actions of views and peres at the title south and a second of sille of a grid and a contract of the contract 1 , , 1 1 4111 1 1 1 4 , 4 4 Terral Land to the state of the the contract of the plant of the contract of the only lost, I think, and for a very short time, in thes confused, probably abridged and bewildering narrative of a period of anarchy and trouble. This history o continual overthrow and re-establishment, the reign o might over right,—in which such supremacy as ther was, was within the reach of every strong man that might arise, and no principle of patriotism or fealt survived to protect the distracted race,—lasted for some hundred and fifty years: when Israel was obliterated by the Assyrians and their race and record swept off without recovery. That those "seven thousand"—a numeral of multitude not to be rightly interpreted—the manetal of multitude not to be rightly interpreted—the manetal ends.

187

those days were part of the economy of moral government, the strong and unmistakable language of a typical and primitive age. "But Israel would not hear, my people would not consider." The ferocity of nature, the wild forces of rebellion and anarchy, the impure religions that were the special affliction and temptation of the time, swept like a flood over the people, who had not have entertained a grudge against his supplanters, and set up its grievance as a motive for withdrawal more keen than any other of the tribes could claim, should be the one faithful to the house of David which had humiliated and overthrown its chief: but perhaps the local bond, and the fact that Jerusalem was within its borders their very gates before they gathered, cowed and vacillating, round the king whom they had already so sorely misled.

"Oh for one hour of Wallace wight Or well-tried Bruce to rule the fight!" pursued among the Hebrews, who were nothing if not religious, with greater fervour than among the careless peoples who knew no better—involved debasement in every characteristic faculty; yet, no doubt, all was worked out according to the ordinary rules of life without bearing any specially miraculous character in the eyes of those to whom it was the course of every day.

And there were great princes in the line of rulers who succeeded each other for nearly three hundred years, son following father with an extraordinary continuance, while the other kingdoms about rose and fell, and Israel, the prey of one victorious captain after another, at last disappeared altogether from the scene. Asa, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, Josiah, brought back something of the wealth and supremacy of Solomon's days again and again to the city among the hills, they had their little wars, sometimes against their brethren of the other tribes. sometimes against the old traditional foes of Ammon and Edom and Moab. And in the minst of these there suddealy rose up against them a more powerful energy, the new scourge of the East, the great empire which had appeared age crosses or any for the total to take it ill to best, entry at reall. A stars where product and they palson has a second second the all ingresses de la Biteva agmist tasta lifted a side a constant and a tage and a state of the second second second retelete dZ ith process of mag to a on the little to the transfer of the transfer cost in a trace of a result of Man - 15 additions and restorations of ornament and wealth as were possible, and the advent of each new monarch of

RUSADERS' CHURCH IN FOREGROUND.

To face per

THE HOUSE OF DAVID a continual battle for His supremacy and poured its heart every denunciation, every scorn that I words could express upon the things of wood and t the images which had eyes and saw not, which had and heard not, the god who perhaps was asleep, t a journey—last and most tremondons satire of all, was cut from the same tree with which the work made his fire. "He will take thereof and warm hims yea he kindleth it and baketh bread, yea he maket god and wershippeth it." Why this irreconcilable mi erance, this struggle carried on from age to age agai every law of natural association, and all the preceder and all the examples around?

The errors can allege no bett spears of our many national convulsions! The other gods would not have objected to share their Olympus, such as it was, with an additional pretender to Divine honours. There need have been no trouble about the matter. A god the more was far less offence than a nationality the more in that trowded area, and what with perpetual bouts of fighting and endless treaties and pacts between themselves in an ever-changing balance of power, these crowded nations managed to exist together and make what progress was possible. But between the great God of heaven and earth and the idols that were stocks and stones there could be no pact or compromise. The fight in this case was unceasing, everlasting. There was no remaining silent while that controversy went on. It was as a fire burning in the veins of him who was compelled to be a witness of the transgression of his people, an iniquity for a time, at least, the authorised and established ser-

JERUSALEM.

CHAP

200

202

JERUSALEM

[CHAP.

sion, no doubt, all had been looking with anxiety and hope. The streets of Jerusalem we are warranted in believing are little changed from that day, with the same inclining often towards each other, keeping out the hot and fervid day: or covered with sombre arcades, here and there debouching into a little opening which shows a blaze of sunlight at the end of the darkness: and now and then penetrated by some arrow of light from a window or slit in the lofty arches overhead. The crowd still streams up and down upon the steep causeway and continual rough steps of stone that dive into the hollow with an abruptness modified by no thought or possibility priests with the silver trumpets sounded forth a welcome as the procession drew nigh. "And when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David the king." What was the song they sang?

- "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised In the city of our God, In the mountain of His holiness.
- "Beautiful for situation, The joy of the whole earth, Is Mount Zion,
- "The city of the great King.
 God is known in her palaces for a refuge."

"I will praise Thee:
For Thou hast heard me,
And art become my salvation.

"Blessed be he that cometh
In the name of the Lord:
We have blessed you
Out of the house of the Lord."

up to the skies with many a heavy bass and many an untrained treble joining in (and, no doubt, also many a sob and outery of religious fervour) as the multitude poured a long singing-"Open to me the gates of righteousness" and was answered by the clear pealing notes of the educated voices. "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, we have blessed you out of the house of the Lord," the effect of an appeal and answer so universal, so comprehensible, the real voice of the people and reply of its leaders must have been far greater than the most admirably constructed service. I once heard, in Notre Dame in Paris, at one of the conférences des hommes, the Leuten course of instruction which occasionally fills that wonderful church with an assembly of men, thousands together, the great hymn of the Stabat Mater sung m plant song, in unison, by the whole assembly. Musical connoisseurs who would have listened with calm criticism. to the most perfect perform thee of Rossint's chef-d'a were, stood there speechless and could only listen and tremble at the great song that rolled through those nobie arches, a volue cot so md which the usagm, from could not betheli reworthy of the car of God Lie Tier, street destroad it at prices to the part to an stight were in the sind Arra with In left est be entred at a first splent the end and the la scat a fieth, the terms of t side at the soul tributed page and a 1 (11 1 1 1 1 elaborate ceremonials of Jewish worship were invented.

207

of the times, or because the other parts of the territory of Israel had been already colonised by foreign races, accomplished only a part of their mission. The posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manassch even unto Zelmlon. They were not well received in the house of Joseph: "They laughed them to scorn and mocked them "we are told. "Nevertheless divers of Asher and Manassch and of Zebulon humbled themselves, and came to Jerisalem"—the remnant of humble and faithful people which is always left in every period of national apostacy. Had the passover been a new thing this call to the scattered Israelites would have been mere arrogant folly alienating instead of conciliating, for what interest could Ephraim or the other tribes have had in a new invention of the Jews?

From all the immediate country, the land of Judah and Benjamin, the households came, with that united force of religious feeling and of the pleasure of a national holiday which is in every pilgramage. Those who have seen the carious groups that come up from the comtry to demandem now, in slow and silent progress the won on a counted high upon the circl, so comes slob tredly, marg little titled research shows with every gire in step lar be tilt se til in a ring to the feeth, sit a stock of sket shing on I solement he plant and or element. entired the second second teres to his on second to the from the first the state of the Tata to the opening to the state of the of the first of th terms of the property of the p the colorettee to be a fine Discount Product of the c pilgrimage from Jerusalem to the so-called tomb of Moses, which makes a sort of balance to the feasts of the Jewish Passover and the Christian Easter, and thus calls together a crowd of pious Mussulmans to hold in check the other crowds that pour into Jerusalem at that season. And it is among the pilgrim groups, which come from the distant desert and many a far-off village, for this ceremonial that the most perfect picture of the primitive pilgrimage is furnished. The pilgrim from Asshur or Zebulon would have no rifle, no pistol, in his belt, with which to detend his honsehold—but he would have his knife, his spear, perhaps a bow slung at his

210

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

v.]

doma mound commissed off into continuity by this imposintible which the existing Tower of David may give some idea. Hezekiah himself had "repaired the wail where it was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and another wall without, and repaired Millo in the city of David, and made darts and shields in abundance." He had even diverted the course of the waters which supplied Jerusalem and stopped up the fountains, that there might be no water for the besiegers. Perhaps some of the uncouth machines "invented by cunning men to be on the towers, and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones withal," might still remain in their old places—means of desperate defence such as that made in later times when the Jews fought every step of their doomed town and fortress against all the strength of the Roman army so that the town was fully fortified and as able, perlogs, to encounter a siege as any small and crowded town subject to block deconcall sides by overpowering that it is could be. But to the as little concurring days before after ity was an integral of the explanats of the dewish ministers are well to an explanats of out to meet the course value of a firm a stress west

The state of the s

. . .

. 1

.

To fore page 112

Whether he had tried his arguments first upon the representatives of Hezekiah before he lifted his voice, and addressed the crowd upon the walls which had come to gaze and listen to the parley, we are not told: but it is clear that he perceived the advantage of raising a popular panic and gaining the town without fighting.

"In what does Hezekiah trust?" eried the envoy—
"in the staff of this broken reed, on Egypt?—But if thou say to me, We trust in the Lord our God—am I now come up without the Lord against this land to destroy it? The Lord said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it."—Rabshakeh was evidently a man aware well calculated to atouse the smouldering superstitions of all that eager fringe of listeners on the walls. How casy to make them believe that the vengeance of Baul and Astarte had brought this proud invader upon them, and that these oftended derives smote by his arm! They besought the Assyrran to speak in his own language, which they could understand, and not in that of the people, the hasty and meompetent judges whose pance might at vay moment precipitate matters. But this very prayer was, no doubt, an inducement the more to make Rabshakeh raise his voice and strengthen his argument. "Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words?" be said, "hath be not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall?" "They held their peace, and inswered him not a word," says the record, But when Hezekrah's nunisters had returned within the gates they jent their garments in sign of sorrow addinalization and with lowed haid went as atrong the anxious consist the properties of the mossage of the Asset at before the kind. He has be exed them with a call distance and thousand despite to the into the contract of the contract of . . 1. . 1 (1

I la best ≥ a final to

* 1 * 1 * 2

, r

41 4 50

To see the second second second steen to the second

€₁, , , , ,

 $K = \{ \cdot, \cdot, \cdot, \cdot \}$

Dr. C. C.

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

v.]

Isaiah, here first introduced into the record, when called upon to answer for the Lord, reassured, however, the trembling questioners. "I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour." With what wondering suspense must these words have been heard! for what rumour could conjure away the substantial might of the 218

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

v.]

which it is unnecessary to enter. Perhaps that eiacula-known in history, poetry full of the sublimest sentiments and endowed with the most beautiful power of expression, besides its claim of prophetic inspiration and of opening the future to the glimpses of men. Such a great figure as Isaiah suddenly arising in a limited circle is assuredly enough,—or at least may appear so to the after historian—to put a stamp upon his age. We know, indeed, that our own great Milton, not to speak of our still greater Shakespeare, made very little immediate difference to the time in which they lived, and owed their greatness to no royal patronage. And we know also, what is perhaps more cognate to the matter, that Isaiah's writings are full of a perpetual protest against his time and appeal to a better to come, as are those of most great religious

THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

v.]

under these inconsiderable princes. And outside the walls of Jerusalem reigned great and contending forces between which no little kingdom could stand: the Egyptians in whose hands one party of the Hebrews would fain have placed themselves, in the hope of escaping the other, the terrible adversary who came from the north. Anarchy and misery arose in the devoted city where no man knew what to do, and least of all the poor puppets of kings, one succeeding another, struggling between the prophets who denounced and the princes who overbore and treated them as nonentities. The question of entire destruction, in the face of an adversary so strong, and in state, priests and scribes, and wealthy persons, had already been despatched in melancholy bands at the pleasure of the victors. When they got as far as Riblah, probably coming up there with the victorious army, the sons of Zedekiah were murdered before his eyes, which were thereafter cruelly put out, and he himself carried off in chains to end his days in prison. Thus the king-

PART II -THE PROPHLIS.

CHAPTER I.

ISAIAH.

To is understood that all classes of critics, those who believe and receive as well as those who doubt and question, have come to a tolerably general decision that the prophecies of Isaiah should be attributed to two persons—one the Isaiah of Hezekiah, the other an altogether unknown, nameless, and untraceable man. I have made no use of this hypothesis, because it seems to me unnecessary. It is of course difficult to apply the ordinary rules of literary criticism to a work which is only known in a translation: seeing it is always possible that the style of the translators, in this case so admirable and homogeneous, may have obliterated the distinctions of the original. The restoration and return from the often-who was willing to sink his own fame in that of his predecessor, indifferent even to "the last infirmity of noble minds," he, the evangelical prophet, as he has been called, was still farther off from the Man of Sorrows, whom he has described in such sublime strains, than the original Isaiah was from Cyrus. There is no difficulty set at rest, to my mind, by the idea that there were two:—but neither to the English reader or writer is the question one of much importance. If they are two, the world is richer by an example of such humility as it has never known before or since combined with a splendour of genius and inspiration to which the same terms may almost be applied.

The only real basis of probability upon which the conpectures in respect to Hezekiah's age as the first literary age of Hebrew history seems to rest is the fact that there was in his days a remarkable school of prophetswhether associated together or ansing individually we have no way of knowing, -what we may call a great outpurst of poetry, and of poetry not ligendary or assoenated with the leats of by zone larges as primative poetry as in every luquige, lat has agreeded a relationer alvined stage, the paths of a mile species parter the sufficient, on error will ever that to be that emstet, angustan et eath at 11 ill as to get a sold a spect to the track of of the first and the second of 4 VIEW LIVERS 4 14 1 1 i. .

orderly words—the lyrics, the oratory, the morals, the thought, with an Eastern wealth of metaphor, with a strain and vehemence of passion, with a music and harmony of sound, which in all these centuries and millenniums have never been surpassed. The literature of the Greeks is much later, but yet it is not so universal. It does not touch every note of the harp as does that of the Hebrews—and strangely enough that great literature, the foundation of all modern learning, and in a certain sense the inspiration of the whole world, is far less acquainted with the secrets of the heart, and tar ass adapted to embody all aspirations and sentiments than entertains no genial weakness, no impulse of indulgence for the sake of his forefathers-but is still more strong in respect to that strange people in whose words we utter our deepest emotions, and whom in most cases we repudiate and dislike. The effect is a very strange one.

The great outburst, if we may call it so, of Hebrew poetry occurred at a time when the two nations of the Jews had great vierssitudes of power and of downfall, yet as much or more of the former than of the latter. reign of Uzziah was a great reign until the disaster of the conclusion which was rather personal to the king than affecting the people. And the reign of Hezekiah was also a great reign, full of wealth and progress, and great national deliverances, besides being, if the opinion of the critics is any way to be considered, a sort of August in age of literature. The twenty years occupied by the deplorable reign of Alaz came between, it is true, justifying any kind of lame at ition and presige of evil. Yet it must be reacombere, that throughout this whole period, at its nighest as will as its lowest fortune, the tenor of the prophetic after acces, the select of the nulessionate pector, alles swhile the two dillah and Is all parts that there is aging the term of the research 1 1 1 1 de trois

A resisting to the ful Prot some 18%. 1. cies ve di e in. . tleper, r to a d Sm. t 1: t+ 1 t , Mark to the state of the state of

ning of a great, prosperous, and as yet unblemished career, that his prophecies were composed. All was well with the two kindred nations; over them, no doubt, as over all the other little powers in Palestine the shadow of the great Assyrian empire was beginning to rise—but for the moment Jeroboam had got the upper hand of Syria, which up to this time had been the strongest of Israel's enemies, and held Damaseus captive. Nothing but well-being and prosperity seems to have existed, nothing but auguries of good fortune to come would seem natural in the circumstances. On the other hand in Judah King Uzziah was no idolater, but, till the pre-

230

every one is agreed. Was it, perhaps, a young Hezekiah, a young Josiah of whom they fondly hoped in the first place that he might be the deliverer? but if so—and in the dim yet splendid vision that rose before them, the lines were all indefinite, and who could refuse to hope that any noble and gracious youth might unfold into that promised prince?—there is no insistence upon it, no affirmation, nor even anything that could be interpreted into an assurance that this was he. They had every inducement that men could have to make their prophecy agree with the prognostics of a new reign: but they never did so—nor did all the prosperities and splendours of the present ever draw them from their cries the disturbed and angry priest, "flee thou away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy, there: but prophesy not again any more at Bethel, for it is the king's chapel, and it is the king's court" (or the sanctuary and the house of the kingdom, according to the marginal correction of the authorised version). "I was no prophet," answers Amos, "neither was I a prophet's son. I was a herdsman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit—and the Lord took me as I followed the flocks, and the Lord said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel."—The same message with individual modifications is conveyed by all the prophets of the day. In M. In the same has a large to the day. In

M. in the seems have the most amount saw 232

JERUSALEM.

[CRAP.

arisen in the days of the first monarch to make Palestine tremble; yet even in Judah was the trumpet of coming disaster sounded, "The cities shall be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and I.] fully carried on—yet still the same cry. The prophets unfold to us the state of morals and manners which existed in both the fated kingdoms with a sternness of censure which, no doubt, to their contemporaries, seemed exaggerated, such a trenchant "criticism of life" as even 234

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

Among these humble hosts without authority, whose incomprehensible, yet is always more or less understood by the heart, lays the case very planly before every one of His creatures. To the lowest intelligence, as to the highest, there is a standard, a line which divides between good and evil. There are a hundred arguments on either side, and the case has been gone over and over again since the beginning of the world in every generation under all circumstances. And many a breaking heart has cried and implored in every age for the one thing that cannot be granted, that God would force child or friend or husband or wife into that right way, would annihilate the perverse will, and destroy the disobedient instincts, and make men good who have no desire to be good. It seems to me that this is the everlasting No of which the philosopher writes. God who has such pity as a father bath, supplies every argument, every inducement that can affect a thinking and loving being, but He will not take away that power of choice which is the man's distinct, man the arrivers a for force the soul to obey Hua. The mortal father to lows hundbly, without knowing to in join and seriou this sime sele protect. With minitude for the vide force of theigs, by their possibility from the exotlers, a nto my year little by elections, bid will be a liverage to the second while split all toris and the line al 1, 1 tax, 2, b 11 Privateles et al. 1. A. e. the pot of the training thought. But as it is impossible to avoid forming individual theories upon matters which concern us all so deeply, I hope the reader will pardon the momentary departure from our manediate subject. On these lines, at least, the great parable of the Jewish history was carried out. Their mission was set very clearly before them, the highest honour conceivable for a nation: their law, so stern in rectitude, yet accompanied with such wonderful shadings of charity and kindness, was given to them centuries before any such code is known in any other race (and this on the showing of the most determined critics, who impute a system of wholesale him. "If thou at all take thy neighbour's ranment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down: for that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his skin; wherein shall be sleep?" The Shylock of modern history has put this charge far out of his ken, and so had the Hebrew of the days of the last Jeroboam. They lay down upon clothes laid to pledge -what we call now the Arab cloak, which is his house, his cover from the scorching sun, his bed and blanket in which he still hes down secure under any tent or tree wherever it may chance to him to pass the night. The poor man, unable to bring his penny of redemption, must have shivered in the night air in his light tunic while the traditionary Jew, the impersonation of the usurer, stretched himself in the most primitive form of wordloosing, on the coverings of his debtors-the crucliest form of pawnbroking. The next item in the indiction it fellows closely upon this "They sold the righter as for silver, and the peop for a pair of shoes." What hat beind go and slav by remains later the unifortar ite from whom his all was thes taken." Bondage, too, was just a marsh, and that a marshould weak of it and a central bescelled so so chyllis constraint. I lose to the contract et les titeres research assect to the I a I a tue t h n 1 + 1 * in the midst both of idolatry and law-breaking, that the

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

which that craving for money to supply their luxuries which is so constant a feature of a falling state, leads to every kind of injustice and oppression: where the cause of the weak is unsafe, peculation in every public office, the very hand of the judge not clean: where ostentation and luxury prevail, the women's special prodigality of dress calling forth an indignant protest as in all other primitive indictments, the men's indolent effeminacy, their vacant lives, and pursuit of pleasure reckless and boundless, filling in the details of the picture. Cruelty and oppression appear on all sides, exactions of all kinds, extravagance and self-indulgence, the prophets prophesying falsely and the people loving to have it so the courts of law debased, the lender turned into a usurer, the debtor threatened with slavery, a society altogether disorganised, without effective authority, without rule, pervaded by license and a slackening of all

242

To face page 232

ury, waited at the gate, to take them across the valley in a party of mingled pleasure and devotion, and up the slope of Olivet to some favourite grove, where half clandestine, half recognised, the gayer rites of another worship were performed. Nothing like being on the safe side, one can imagine the cyme nobles saying, as they came back to envelop themselves in their silken robes, and lay themselves upon their sculptured couches with all the fine work of ivory and gilding:—while steward and intendant outside ground every farthing that could be got out of the misery of the needy, out of the prodigal's greedy want and the shivering poor man who

I.] THE PROPHETS.

247

and he had beheld the restoration, the re-dedication, a

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

than is the triumphant vision of a time to come in which 248

THE PROPHETS.

I.]

human example it was not. The awe, the solemn impression, the extraordinary relief in a moment to all the terrors of the threatened city died with the day that brought them forth, and the human routine went on as before. So it has been in every age: and so it will be, no doubt, till the race comes to an end, or some other impulse higher than any known heretofore gives a higher possibility, an alteration beyond all hopes to the well-

[CHAP.

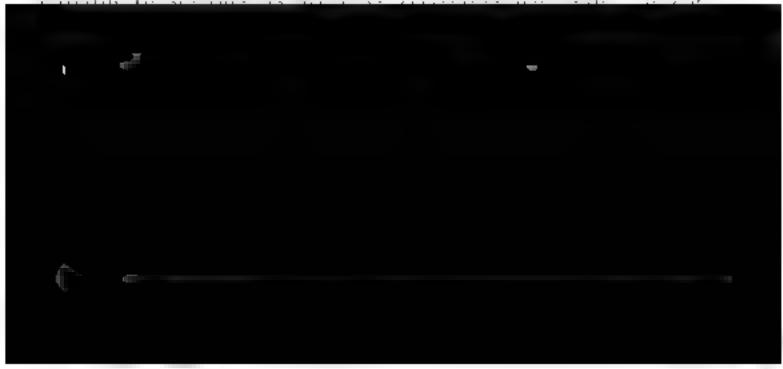

THE PROPHETS.

1.]

253

before his race: with great indecency, M. Renan and other critics say, but that is scarcely the question. It is an incident that might occur even now, though probably not with the same universal publicity, in the same unchanged and unchangeable land.

And was it, perhaps, at the same early period that be stood—in one of those characteristic openings of the steep dark street where the crowd that gathered to listen would establish itself as in a theatre in the narrow depth of that raying of bailding, each line of glowing turban or kerch of threater with gold, rising a little higher than the offer; and with the viol in las hour which was

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

"What could have been done more to my vineyard,
That I have not done in it?
Wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, Brought it forth wild grapes?

"And now go to;
I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard:
I will take away the hedge thereof,
And it shall be eaten up;
And break down the wall thereof,
And it shall be trodden down:
And I will lay it waste:
It shall not be pruned, nor digged;
But there shall come up briars and thorns:
I will also command the clouds
That they rain no rain upon it."

Then, one can fancy the louder note struck from the rument, the pause of the singer, the stir in the multi-

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

258

- "Howbeit he meaneth not so, Neither does his heart think so.
- "For he saith,
 By the strength of my hand I have done it,
 And by my wisdom; for I am prudent:
 I have removed the bounds of the people,
 I have put down the inhabitants
 Like a valuant man......
- "Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith?
 Shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it?"
 As if the rod should shake them that lift it up,
 Or the staff against that (the hand) which is not wood?"

We can only pause here to note how the prophet bursts

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

"He is come to Aiath,
He is passed to Migron;
At Michmash he hath laid up his carriages:
They are gone over the passage:
They have taken up their lodging at Geba;
Ramah is afraid;
Gibeah of Saul is fled.
Cry shrill with thy voice, O daughter of Gallim:
Listen, O Laish! thou poor Anathoth.
Madmenah is scattered;
The inhabitants of Gebim gather to flee.

"This very day he will halt at Nob:
He will shake his hand
Against the mount of the daughter of Zion, Against the hill of Jerusalem."

THE PROPHETS.

26

shall not regard silver," rise up pitiless before our eyes: and still more wonderful is the vision in which the prophet, suddenly rapt as is his characteristic from the more practical and immediate scope of his poem, and plunged with an overwhelming force of impulse into the future and the unseen, tears aside the dark veil of Hades and displays the great dead, the monarchs of the past, rising to meet the fallen conqueror—

"Hell from beneath is moved for thee To meet thee at thy coming It stirreth up the dead for thee, Even all the chief ones of the earth.

I.]

deliverance—Isaiah's great ode which had been listened to in its first utterance with troubled and wondering incomprehension, may have been taken out from among the other rolls of mystic writing and read with an understanding and awed acknowledgment, of its tremendous truth. Sennacherib's fall was not the final meaning of that prophecy, yet it might well have seemed so, a presage and preface. Hezekiah no doubt had heard it proclaimed, when he was a boy, in his father's troubled and disastrous reign, when, perhaps, the utmost that was thought of it was that it was an imaginative speculation, a vision of what might be if ever that great and conquering power should fall. In the same way, I believe, it was applied to Napoleon in the time of his glory. And it can scarcely be believed that there were not men in Judah who were capable of feeling the force of the poetry and upon whose memory that picture of Hades had imprinted itself with the vividuess of youthful recollection. the first wonder, the first stunned and startled sensation, the rapture of exultation in their deliverance were somewhat abated, would not they bethink themselves-was there not something we have bear a poem beginning · Hades is raived have somethat more the laurt beat? Surely it was of the Assyrian the proplets ake? Iswah rain so latter days was no length, jork ps, the mustiel proportal short comments and his prinis in the public places, whele vilker beet sa some discribed whose hearth a restriction as said of paredict it as Hew the acceptable stable anterestant par es ceterisot when the raddle at some extending the are taid chancel is a state is not as the partilitarish our male usice and some those great dreams of the Deliverer to come, on which all his being was intent, bidding him come and read to the king that old thing of his, which the old men were talking of, that vision, or whatever it might be, of Hades? Let him arise and bring it forth and read to the king. And with what awe would Hezekiah listen, in his timid faithf ilness, for whom Hades would never be disturbed, whose hope was for peace in his own day whatever might follow, and perhaps a humble slipping into heaven at the end, no king, but the least of God's servants. No exultation, no cry of triumph was in that poem, but the awe of a great judgment and a great suffering, a vast and dim

JERUSALEM.

[СНАР.

get his erv of "Woe to Rahvlon" nor the doom which he to come, breaks forth anon into cries of joy that thrill the air. Or if the reader pleases it is now the new Isaiah, the poet of the restoration who speaks.

Awake, awake;
Put on thy strength, O Zion;
Put on thy beautiful garments,
O Jerusalem, the holy city!
Shake thyself from the dust;
Arise, O Jerusalem;
Loose thyself from the bands of thy neck,
O captive daughter of Zion

- "How beautiful upon the mountains
 Are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings,
 That publisheth peace,
 That bringeth good tidings,
 That publisheth salvation;
 That saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!
- "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice, With the voice together shall they sing For they shall see eye to eye, When the Lord shall bring again Zion

Break forth into joy, Sing tegether Ye waste places of Jerusalem For the Lord math, conforted has people, He hath redecine is for solone

The Leid hith made lane His L. v. rm. In the exescitable casteries. And all tree adserts, error Spassertles realty of a food

By whom was this go by to consect has eyes far franscenting eye ything that eye has seed or a mend or the heart of rans consists on to the salvation at dismanalone are of the first of the ethic lowding rans, here same advants to the both that the tell accounmental tension the same are a real aspir to at

THE PROPHETS.

I.

26

manner of being is this Holy One of Israel? This is what Isaiah asks, in vision, in high and wonderful poetic musings, "searching," as St. Peter explained long after, "what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in him did signify." What did it signify? Something too strange for belief, too wonderful for the most authentic vision. Was he but dimly conscious what it meant? did he believe it allegorical, a similitude, a spiritual picture, not a fact to be verified in every detail? or did he cry out like Peter and the rest, "Be it far from thee, Lord!" in the first anguish and comprehension of what they meant, those wonderful words?

- 3
 - "And he made his grave with the wicked,
 And with a rich man in his death;
 Because he had done no violence,
 Neither was any deceit found in his mouth.
 - "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him;
 He hath put him to grief:
 When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin,
 He shall see his seed,
 He shall prolong his days,
 And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand."

CHAPTER II.

Jerusalem, and this time with a force which exceeded all previous threatenings in the unbroken terror of its denunciations, as the events about to take place exceeded

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

the ancient tabernacle, the young Samuel who answered, "Here I am" in the same simple faith to his master on earth and his Master in heaven. Jeremiah, from his youth, must have had a melancholy and troubled spirit, feeling to the depths of his heart the uneasy condition of all about him, the seething of all the disorderly elements, the decomposition of the national life. He shrank in his timidity and sadness from the terrible task put upon him. He had not the splendid and fiery eloquence of Is tigh, the impetus of genius and energy which carried that prophet, swift and triumphant, to the heights and depths of his subject whatever that might be. And the raised drive to succession of terror and iron pillar, and brazen walls, against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, and the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land. And they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith sloft of the wellow under the Tomple well he sould are

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

п.]

of pious frauds by which they conceive the religion of

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

THE PROPHETS.

11.]

sumes with stern and simple details which bring before 279

280 JERUSALEM.

CHAP.

claim without ceasing. It was not with his own will that he did it. Again and again does he mourn his cruel fate, cursing the hour that he was born, upbraiding God himself for having put this yoke upon his shoulders, with that wild audacity of suffering which breaks forth so often in the weak. "O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was entired," / e. to deliver this painful unwilling message, he cries. "thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed. I said I will not make mention of Him, nor speak any more in His name. But His word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary of forbearing, and I could not stay." Thus, notwithstanding all dark looks, all threats directed against him, and no doubt the restraints which his respectable kindred both in Jerusalem and Anathoth would attempt to enforce, nothing stayed the inclancholy messenger, who was there in all the assemblies of the people, a shadow upon every brief regoring an unyielding monitor monotonous in the continued waining, which his inclancholy countenance uttered even when his voice was silent. Sometimes he calls upon the pastoral people or are at to the markets with the a produce to abance ther terts in Albert to coll that the referred to so son the she deser, extle previous of that here it a free the next eets a pit a Day with a sorting to see till the village the base sometimes in Julies the Teach and is a cross off so upon your this sail need that the second is displies and official to some official in half ter soft on a sign start 1 1 1 1 Lass to telds

11.]

THE PROPHETS.

보원

voice which had become so familiar, Jeremiah pours forth his lament with that individual voice, with that strong cry of personal anguish, which is the most convincing of all.

"Oh that my head were waters,
And more eyes a fountain of tears,
That I might weep day and night
For the slain of the daughter of my people!

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

prophet might be standing? The wonder is not that he was seized and punished at last, but that his freedom solution: the young sons whom he had left behind to meet the emergency were wholly unfit to face its difficulties, and probably the wisest and bravest of his counsellors and champions perished with him at Megiddo, leaving Judah as Scotland was after Flodden, defenceless, at the mercy of the conqueror. The son who succeeded him, Jehoahaz, not the eldest in age but probably the child of a mother of superior rank, had a precarious reign of three months during which time Pharaoh Necho became master of the kingdom and city, exacted an enormous indemnity, and dethroned and carried off the veath (channel lower, the natural sections of a text and the mark asing a text and the mark as a text and the mark certainly the pride even of those who defiled it, a national distinction and glory: "If ye will not hearken . . . I will make this house like Shiloh, I will make this city a curse among all the nations of the earth." The crowd had no difficulty in understanding his words. It was from Shiloh that the Ark had been carried forth to procure, like a tetish, the triumph of the Israclites, who had come to look upon it as the heathers looked upon their gods of wood and stone: it had been disastrously lost in the lost battle and Shiloh had become Ichabod, a place from whence the glory had departed. This prophecy, so appalling, so definite, so clearly comprehensible, produced an immediate tumult in the crowd: they were no longer under the sway of the pious King who protected the prophets; they were no longer afraid to raise their you'es or their heads in the presence of their victors. Masters for the moment of their own city, free to do what they would, with many an unsettled score of resentment against this prophet of evil, the first outery of the angry priests against him lit up the excitement of the people into fury. How dared he to say that this house should be as Shiloh". The priests scazed upon the andacous specker, the angry crowd clist roll round hir. "Detl" as the universit is the field pulse of the uncontrol about all tude, if in this work is some sitter. Letherane is when I har lader a tentral enal A senty land. Then we also get to the mile tarrines il some d'arrisert qui es there is no transfer by the second series to the first according to the state of the s ne fil ferbe per a be face some of the contract of the co she cilica words, but that it is gate, perhaps that now called the Golden Gate (so carefully built up to prevent the entrance of Messiah, when he had been summing hunself on the steps of the Temple, to tell that tale, as a thing he could himself recollect? At all events Jeremiah's protectors were more powerful than those who were against him and for the time he

LENGER CLOTS DEZIGES

THE PROPHETS.

287

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP

THE PROPHETS.

Jeremiah must have come from the Temple, probe by that new gate where he had just been tried for life, and down the slopes of Moriah to where pleas Kedron ran in the bottom of the valley, and followed i stream to the southern end where Absalom's tower re up to point the way. No doubt there were devout for lowers who would not miss a movement of the I rophe who would point to each other the way he had taken an go after him and no doubt also angry enemies eager t caten him in his talk, and devoted in late as the other in love to every trace of his feotsteps. There could be no more pleasant walk about derusalem than that path by the purling of the little river under the objects Olivet using gently green ... $M_{ m OP}$ ds

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

thereafter with the price of blood, frowned upon them

rant, but who could not mistake the simplicity and force of that sign. The high priest, perhaps, was absent, perhaps unwilling to interfere with the son of his prede-from the valley, in hot indignation, but made no movement until the prophet paused again "in the court of the Lord's house" and began to repeat his prophecy. "Behold, I will bring on this city all the evil that I have pronounced against it." Then the priest could contain himself no longer. He gave the order to seize and pun ish the prophet of woe. "Then Pashur smote Jeremiah." This would apparently indicate that, transported by a passion of resentment to hear himself and all the ruling party thus defied, he inflicted not only the shame of the stocks but the panishment of the lowest offender, the forty stripes save one, if on his tellow-paiest, his kins

as a mighty terrible one" a thought which in the midst of his trouble, in the darkness of his abandonment all shamed and suffering as he is, makes him break forth into a sudden burst of joy, "Sing ye to the Lord, praise ye the Lord: for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hands of evildoers." Did the watchman on the walls hear this sudden cry in the night and come down to listen—overawed by the victim's triumph, and, perhaps, not knowing that when that momentary shout had died on the night air, the heart of the lonely man sank again in his bosom, and in a despondency as sudden and instructive he cursed the day that he was born? years under the protection of King Josiah, and the prestige of his own father's name, it is very possible that the ignominy of his present position was more than he could bear. His ministry had in some measure changed even before this turning-point. From the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim he had been a man discountenanced, to whom other methods than those of argument and exhortation were necessary. He had been forced to adopt the symbolical teaching which had been common to Isaiah and the other prophets, the language of signs and pictures, and that of a most forcible kind. He had put a yoke upon his own neck and bonds on his limbs as a symbol of the subjection which was to come not only upon Judah but upon all the surrounding nations. He had brought up the Rechabites out of their dwelling and offered them wine in order to show by the contrast of their faithfulness to their ancestor's command how unreasonable was the disobedience of the Hebrews. last and most felling of all, he had broken the potter's vessel, the bottle of brittle earthenware, to show how the king loin of David was to be dashed to pieces on the very stones which is rised its found tions. Was not this of itself an evidence that his indicion had ceased to be the instructed up a superior at sees and had come to consist more, in a rope of the factor in detaile who would rethardanista di vallicass, bits, com nemded , sland should be a galacter to the design. , i, the At sect leds of the geter straighted the section of a section between all the cited and have also the tent Circs represent the contract Will go lette ten to the ten Intil the property of the property of the later of the la Arrest Marrier Level 1 1 . Photo had heard but little of what Jeremiah had to say. It is true that the prophet had been commanded on more than one occasion to stand at the gate by which the king went out and came in, probably where he still sat to administer justice on set occasions according to primitive custom. But of all persons in the world a king can escape most easily from what he does not wish to hear, and either the prophet might be hustled away or the king break up the session to escape from that persecuting voice. Thus there was yet one individual in Jerusalem to whom it might be supposed that the warning and appeal to repentance, and the promise that was inveriably attached to a chance of life, had not felly cone. Jeremiah was there-

some humble house at Anathoth or other shelter, we are not told; but at all events, while it was going on the prophet and his devoted secretary must have had an

II.] THE PROPHETS.

29

But no party, we may well believe, advocated as Jeremiah did, the policy of throwing aside all unavailing resistance, and rendering full submission to the invader. It was not a patriotic policy at the first glance. But we may believe, at the same time, from the evidence, at once in these same prophetic addresses, and in the national records which point to a state of utter disorganisation and incompetence, that Jerusalem was quite unfit to offer any serious resistance, and that any feeble and hopeless, if still fierce and desperate, stand she could make would train of captives following his steps, and among them the royal boys, descendants of good King Hezekiah to this may have been, Baruch was sent for, and when he had read his book (which probably contained but a chosen few of the prophecies of Jeremiah) to this grave assembly, their conclusion was that the king must be informed. "Tell us now, how didst thou write all these words" they asked. Then Baruch answered them: "He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in this book." The grave men, concerned and troubled as by a serious matter heard for the first time, appear to us like a picture surrounding the young scribe with auxious looks, disturbed beyond measure by what they had heard, not

802

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

"his winter-house," no doubt the southern rooms fully exposed to the sunshine, looking over the fortifications of the Temple enclosure to the network of ascending

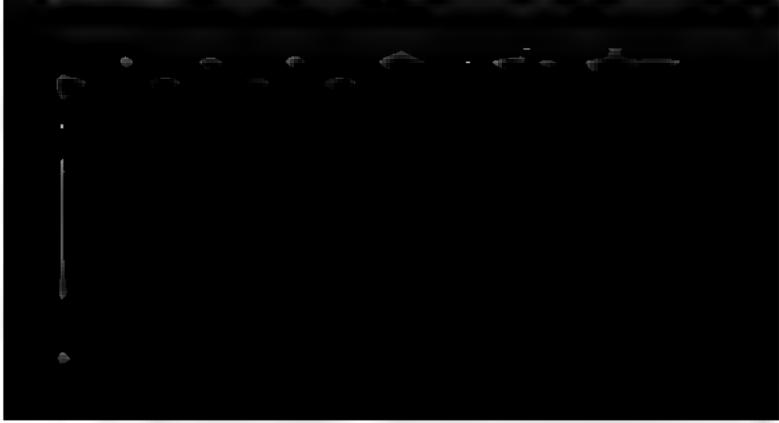

THE PROPHETS.

11.]

803

with the purer fire of wood embers glowing red. The king sat near this centre of warmth while the courtier stood up and read. There would be some such stand as those now used for the Koran to support the heavy roll. But Jehudi had not read above "three or four leaves" when the king smatches at from him, and drawing a kinfe from his girate, divided the pare insent with a stroke and threw the process upon the face "thotal ale the roll was ecusamed." The set the princes, Emilian (who would seem to have been the king's father inslaw) and Default and Gematriah lift in stelly their entire these to restrict the king is father instructed to restrict the second than, that without effect the other court its work seem had destroyed was done over again. It was a serious matter in those days to destroy a book of which only one copy existed: but even then it was a futile effort, The prophet repeated in the enforced leisure of his banishment all that he had before dictated to his secretary, "and there were added besides many like words." Then, as now, it was the most vain attempt that could be made to crush the literature by which, and more then even than now, a nation lives. For what should we have known of Jerusalem any more than we know of Edom, or Ammon, or Moab, but for Jeremiah and his friend? A painfully deciphered stone, the triumphant record of one man's doings, calls forth the wonder and curiosity of the whole world, while the living record of how men looked and talked and acted in all the recogniseableness of their humanity, is our legacy from the Hebrews: over which naturally, it being so infinitely more important, we make no such commotion, receiving it ealinly: or saggesting that it is, perhaps, all an invention, and that to such angry king, no sach anxious coun-

JERUSALEM.

[СПАР,

304

THE PROPHETS.

n.]

305

the actual manner of his death. He was "bound in 306

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

feel on their athermies would have done the decolation of 11.]

the court who stood round Jehoiakim, with troubled his palace to the prophet to ask his prayers and his advice. "Pray now unto the Lord our God for us." Was it superstition rather than devotion that inspired this embassy, as Balak had sent to Balaam to curse the Israelites? Did those unfortunate rulers of the doomed and impoverished place hope that if Jeremiah could but be got to change his mind all would go well? Was it rather as a fetish than as an exponent of God's will that they sought him? If so they were most quickly undeceived. The prophet after his wanderings, after the horrors of the siege and the captivity, the fulfilment of so many of his predictions, was not likely to be persuaded into other views by any embassy. His message even was scarcely tempered by the offer of a place of repentauce. "Deceive not yourselves," he says, "saying the Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart." It must have been with anger and disappointment that the buffled chyovs withdrew

And certainly determali's behaviour was not conciliatory. He would seem to have gone about, with the girdle round him which had been "in 11) at the rocks by the Euclint's. I discribitly typic a mish, k which he have not expressed. If the voice of several which was the as a frequency section the following acts Haratte coeff seashed of the state of th . [1] . what w n limit, in † , 1. 1, . 1, tarte, ta sa sa s 1 1 1. • 1 tarily alarmed by the rumour of Pharaoh's army approaching, had made a feint of raising the siege. soon as the ways were liberated and the gates open Jeremiah went out " to go into the land of Benjamin" "in the midst of the people," no doubt among the crowd which would pour forth in search of food and refreshment after long famishing in the blockaded city. But the captain of the ward saw among the crowd the figure of the prophet, going in all probability to his father's fields at Anathoth to bring in provisions for himself and his kindred. "Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans," he cried, seizing upon Jeremiah as he passed: and, no doubt, the crowd would think the accusation a very likely one considering how the prophet proclaimed the might of the Chaldeans and discouraged all resistance to them on every occasion. Jeremiali denied the accusation, but in vain: and he was hustled away through the throng to the Temple embosure, and thence to the house of Jonathan the scribe, unbrincath which lay the dungeors hown an the rock, and in such cvil condition as the ancients thought hit and meet for serious offenders. If we we are told, be remain I winter days " which terns in Hebry handle git a long eachigh we as a ppese to olm to till, at most the Chalde as and the think the transfer the transfer in the A rathering action / killsevi at a tree search and not in the ses the pase leter to the pasmer no teatre is section to be all

In a some of the south the first and a some of the south the south

JERUSALEM

the end of the seventh year all the conditions of bondage

312

[CHAP.

No sterner denunciation ever came from Jeremiah's lips than that which followed the miserable failure of this only real effort after amendment made in the doomed city. It was probably uttered in the miserable dungeon where he lay, searcely capable of hearing, deep underground as he was, even those "snortings from Dan," when they come, that sound of a great multitude which would intimate to the whole city that the besiegers were gathering again to their camp outside the walls. "I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the Loid, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the kingdon's of the world." It sent back to his dungeon. "Cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan, the scribe, lest I die there," and imprisoned him instead "in the court of the prison," presumably a bearable confinement which kept him out of the way of danger. Zedekiah gave orders at the same time that a piece of bread should be given him daily out of the bakers' street "until all the bread in the city was of vainly endeavouring to hold at bay, the powerful monarch at their gates; but at the same time it was, no

n 11-1

JERUSALEM.

CHAP.

the gate of Benjamin," the gate that looked out towards the north, that of St. Stephen or of Damascus, perhaps, in modern nomenclature, sadly sitting looking out upon the great army that lay stretched as far as eye could see, superintending, perhaps, the erection of some new machine for stones or other missiles on the walls. "My lord," said the eunuch, "these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah, the prophet whom they have cast into the dungeon; he is like to die of hunger in the place where he is: for there is no bread in the city." Strengthened by the king's permission Ebed-melech hurried away and with thirty men to aid him succeeded in drawing up Jeremiah with the aid of strong ropes and "old cast clouts" (but this phraseology is far too Saxon for the Eastern rags and fragments, indescribable scraps of apparel)—put under his armholes to keep the cords from cutting into his emaciated frame-from the horrible pit and cut of the mirv

316

ш]

THE PROPHETS.

31

with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand." That this was now wise and patriotic advice there is no doubt; for resistance was hopeless, and only the rage of despair carried it on. And Zedekiah was, in fact, a revolted tributary who had accepted the kingdom under conditions which he had broken, and whose part it evidently was to make submission, since no higher rôle plished. "He was there when Jerusalem was taken" looking on with a breaking heart while the last horrors were inflicted, the streets filled with the slain, the holy and beautiful house he loved battered down, and fire raging among its courts. No man harmed Jeremiah in that hour of fate: the Babylonian general would have given him honour and promotion if he would have accepted them, knowing, no doubt, by report that the prophet had always been on his side. It would appear that when all was over, he was bound with the rest in chains and went along with the mournful procession of captives as far as Ramah: where some one probably told the general who he was, and he was immediately released. "If it seem good to thee to come with me unto Babylon, come, and I will look well unto thee; but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me to Babylon, forbear: behold all the land is before thee: whither it seemeth beautiful city, the joy of the whole earth, as they had proudly called her in their songs, lying bare upon her hillside, her dead unburied, the wretched relics of her populace coming out by night like owls and bats, gathering what garbage they could find to eat, afraid of their own shadows. Not any dread satisfaction in the prophecy fulfilled, not any sense of rehef in the catastrophe accomplished would reconcile the hearts of these miserable Hebrews to the dreadful sight before their

THE PROPHETS.

31

ATT-00

n.]

JERUSALEM.

[CRAP.

tradition calls the Grotto of Jeremiah, and in which it is believed the prophet took shelter, and wrote the great and heartrending poem which we call the Book of Lamentations. Nowhere could the desolation of the deserted city be more clearly seen. It was there that the assault had been made, and the shattered walls and rumed fortifications would afford clear views of the horror within, the vultures descending in dreadful clouds, the jackals stealing forth by night to seek an awful The smoke of the burning would hang over the whole and over Moriah the aching void where once Solomon's beautiful Temple had been, would wound the eyes that gazed and gazed and found no familiar outline in the charred ruins heaped upon the hill. And sound there would be none in the abandoned place, the openings of the streets all hushed, their steep lines of descent between buildings roofless, windowless, full of emptiness, pathetically visible without a passenger. And there the prophet of woe might well have looked forth under the black shelf of the rocks, and trained his mournful song -one of those wonderful Hebrew poems which forestilled in the early certaines. If that later poets could

320

The reader will remember how Dante in the sudden hush and stupefaction of the blow which seemed to darken heaven and earth to him, could find no words so meet to express his sense of that cessation of life and hope as those of his ancient fellow craftsman, the poet of desolation, extled, imprisoned, outlawed like him, yet turning ever like him with a heartbroken tenderness to the home of his love. "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people!" Jeremah's prophecies had not possessed like those of his predecessor Isaiah the unfailing charm of a poetic genius which never flagged, and had all the rescurces of un caseious but supreme

- "Mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, Because the comforter is far from me.
- The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, And keep silence:
 They have cast dust upon their heads;
 They have girded themselves with sackcloth:
 The virgins of Jerusalem
 Hang down their heads to the ground.
- The children and the sucklings swoon
 In the streets of the city.
 They say to their mothers,
 Where is the corn and the wine?
 They swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city.
 Their soul was poured out Into their mothers' bosom.
- Arise, cry out in the night:
 In the beginning of the watches pour forth thy heart like water
 Before the face of the Lord:
 Litt up thy heads towards Him for the life of thy young children, guardians who defended and adopted their action, is very curious; rest or hope was not for God's messenger either in Jerusalem or among the fugitives.

They and the children of Judah together, going and weeping:

They shall go, and seek the Lord their God.

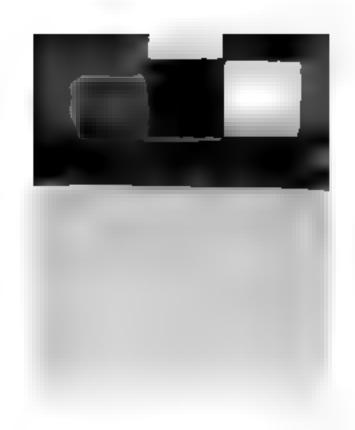

They shall ask their way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying,

Come, and let us join ourselves unto the Lord

In a perpetual covenant

That shall not be forgotten."

Thus the sun bursts once more from the clouds, and sheds a glow of light ineffable upon the conclusion of that troubled and darksome way. It is believed that he died in Egypt in a depth of national distress more dark and hopeless than that in Babylon: for the exiles in Egypt were in a voluntary captivity and to them no promise of restoration ever came.

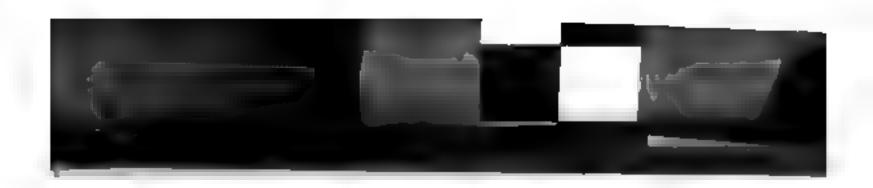

CHAPTER III.

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

presentation before the Hebrew audience of what must follow disobedience, the fullest picture of the forces opposed to them, which in their own strength they were incapable of meeting. The bold language of symbol. when words failed, the picture-lesson adapted to the rudest mind, of Isaiah's child, of the piece of pottery in Jeremiah's hand -were all used for the same end was their burden, their ceaseless effort. And when God permitted these gifted souls, weighed down by the national destruction that was so clearly coming, and by the contradiction of sinners, and the hopelessness of averting that downward course, to escape into the blessed contemplation of a remote future, and the Deliverer who was to come-even then the highest rhapsody of prophetic vision was, as may be said, practical, no vague and radiant hope of a golden age, but a distinct portrayal of Himwhom they looked for, a description in many points so exact that the wonder is how it could have been mistaken when the fulthment came. And what is true of the chief. among the prophets is true also of the minor members in different degrees of poetry and perception, all of whom had the same lessor, to teach, the same barden of prophecy played out. He is 12 we have those providers = 1000

828

"How shall we sing the Lord's song.
In a strange land ""

We have no parallel to this in all the world of literature, or to the impassioned cry which no Greek, no Roman patriotism has ever given atterance to with such heartrending force: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cuming!" It was among the exiles with whom this was the prevailing sentiment that Ezekiel, a young man at that recognised moment of fitness for office and privilege and the highest work, his thirtieth year, was suddenly called by the voice of the Lord, and consecrated by visions ineffable to the service of God and of his countrymen. He had been presumably brought to Babylon with the young king Jehoiachin five years before, to rejoin many captives of the previous reign already there; and probably also to find the remnant of an older captivity still, the relies of Israel, half identified at the end of a century with the people among whom they bad been thrown, yet, no doubt, preserving many points of contact and much compassionate sympathy for the detuchments of the Jews arriving one bandafter another in the same condition of dishonour and deprivational Israel, lew society by the interplest annid tie holdes et aliens ela fraction de la la hope el centre t in kear concept, a presion so the pinderin softe, sile vise area to i. i. a soft at in distribution of the state of th lits.

m.]

THE PROPHETS.

38

strained upon Jerusalem with something of the breathless and strained attention with which spectators watch a doomed ship in the midst of a tempest: her efforts to gain some sheltering harbour, the efforts made on her behalf, the sinking and rising of the broken hulk, with one poor flag of despair fluttering in the wild winds upon a spar, which from moment to moment may disappear in the blankness of the waves that rage about it—enchaineven sing It would almost seem to have been in some such forlorn colony that Ezekiel, the priest, the son of Buzi, was called to his office. Somewhere about the same time Jeremiah in Jerusalem had written a letter to the exiles brought by the embassy sent from King Zedekiah with tribute or renewal of Lomage to the King of Babylon: in which he adjured them to disregard the false promises of deliverance made to them by unauthorised prophets, and to build houses and plant gardens and surround themselves with families in short to enter upor all the routine of settled life in the country where their lot was now cast, and from which in the lifetime of the present generation there was likely to be no deliver-Perhaps, at the period of Ezekiel's call, this exhortation had not yet reached Babylon in the long delays of the terrible road four months' journey across the desert. Perhaps, it never did reach the lumble colony on the banks of the Clabar, apart from the greater current of life.

Then extreme absorption of thought and feeling in the fate of demosal class variety apparent in the sort of object lessen which the proplet is to the give whether in some part both instriction if the people, whether to give by a a fins easi, per a service of so I the mevir blooms that consultance of a lothereby st 1,11, 11, 1, 1, 1 to the second r t] t], t detrional desired. 11 1151,0 the correction is d, en-11 1. · No. 1 10 1 - 1 1. +1 , camped against it. What a thing would that be to find in some Babylounan wreck or mass of runs, the rule drawing on the brick or tile, the indications of gateway and rampart which every breathless watcher over his shoulder would recognise, as he formed them with unskilful hand! There on the tower of the northern guts would be king Uzz, this engines my niced by our ning men to shoot arrows and great stones with L' and there, appeared, the last refinement of war. Neb ach chiezz ar's a fer size works, contout ing the other to still the detensive buttery. Would the propact, and as of personal content is an all the religious revotees of the East, propute his pollute I for the

his house, "and the elders of Judah sat before me," waiting in melancholy silence for the expected message; when suddenly the prophet was rapt into that state in which the faculty of vision came to him-fell, as we should say, into a sort of trance-in which his spirit was suddenly transported to Jerusalem, "to the door of the inner gate that looketh towards the north, where was the seat of the image of jealousy," no doubt some image of Baal, or other idol such as many successive kings had not scrupled to bring into the house of the Lord. Ezekiel had been familiar with those courts and all they contained in his youth when, as a priest's son, he had been brought up in the precincts of the Temple. "The glory of the Lord was there "-that dazzling radiance of holiness and light which Ezekiel with faltering lips had endeavoured to describe to the astonished people: but it remained outside the walls; and with that glory m his eyes the prophet looked at the rigid features of the idol in its immovable helplessness with righteous contempt. But such a vacant monument of idolatry. was little or comparison with what remained. In one of the maty at mas which sations of the Temple. and the same seed is ablact office, the sames, and ars a solve to vel sufficients as they sex it cer shilteness it saw "the idols att , s o Isra p t writing d covery t a sign to sold that he sist the in a compact to the transfer of the larger the metics of a least tenter fed 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 The second state of the second second the women, who seem in the distorted state of the race to have been, not as usual the most faithful to the worship of God, but foremost in every infidelity, sit weeping for Thamuz, and pissing by them, in the very inner court at the entrance to the Temple itself—between the gate and the alter who historic close to the gate—the prophet saw tive individually in a with their backs turned to the Temple on their two stewards the east, worshipping the sum who is shown ver Ohyet a ross the deep valley upon all the glistein of parades of the horse of God. This was, we cannot but thank, a care in the rand ele-patriotism, as in his brother prophet: but his view of

have had their will, they have turned from their allegiance and broken every vow; and now the inevitable end has come upon them, which overtakes all wantons, according to those very laws of nature which they preferred to JERUSALEM.

838

[CHAP.

In another picture the prophet shows us the King of Babylon standing "at the parting of the way, at the head of two ways," to try by divination whether the time had come to destroy Jerusalem. In his grasp were arrows, marked with the lot, which he shook in his hand according to an immemorial custom. And he also "consulted with images, he looked in the liver," trying the auguries of classic usage, which would thus seem to have been already existing from the remotest time. Then came the day, the dreadful day, when the decision was made. "Woe to the bloody city!" cries the prophet: "I the Lord have spoken. I will not go back, neither will I spare, neither will I repent: according to thy ways and according to thy doings shall He judge thee, saith the Lord God." With what terrible interest must the captives have listened, with what outeries of remonstrance and indignation, "Be it far from us!" with what trembling of heart '. Their sons and their daughters, their lathers and mothers were left behind in the doomed. city. If this were time what was there more in life to hope for ". How were they to endure the dread suspense, the stall near the drabe at mity of late" the horror of know is, to sent i hours of not knowing, for long mout's a good later the scattest that could cross the rest desert, the place and most, me that lay rice then note len

The time of the state of the st

of the continue must have kent the number's house in

of, O Lord! or O my brother! no ashes on the head, no rites of sepulture—but only the silence of one universal horrible calamity too great for human signs or words.

After this tremendous sign and the predictious that accompanied it the prophet would seem to have been dumb, either metaphorically as saying no more upon this subject which occupied all thoughts, or actually. There is a long interval in his book (which by no means certamly, however, implies a direct chronological succession) during which a number of prophecies concerning other nations, comparatively dark to us who have no material by which to judge of their accuracy, are inserted: and it is not till nearly three years after, that the next incident which more nearly concerns us occurs. While he is sitting basing, perhaps writing down the message that has been given to him concerning Egypt, troubled all night with strange sensations, the premonitory symptoms of some great event and visitation, the messenger of the recomptished saldenly appears before him. "One that have escaped carried Jerusalem came to me, saying, the city is so, after a New the hand of the Lord was upon to tell ever at the left twis escaped came; and Lad varie, dra ntlite innetorem the mornrig. The conserved and I was no more dal' North days small ave arrivel en a constant mist the transfer of the transfer o l es e tlen, no entissalat enwit to the routes and places where his unaccustomed garb and faltering speech would be remarked, through the country; and after long delay and many adventures, reached the little mournful colony who had hung their harps upon 342

JERUSALEM.

CHAP.

who heard that day, perhaps of the extinction of their family, perhaps of the death of some gallant son on the walls of Jerusalem, or some daughter shamed and outraged in its bloody streets-would make no outcry, would repress every tear, bind their headgear upon their heads, and their shoes on their feet, with a pang still more profound in the renunciation of every sign of mourning, than we should feel in a similar self-dental. "Ye shall pine away and mourn one towards another " What description could be more pathetic or more real? The father and mother would turn towards each other when they were alone, in the silent communion of sorrow, the woman clasp her child to her broken heart, the sisters lay their heads on each other's shoulders, in grief that uttered no word: then confront the daylight with still faces and the dumbness of self-controlled despair, as Ezekiel had done in that dark day when the desire of his eyes had been taken from Lim

And then it was that the prophet's mouth was opened and he burst forth

^{*} As I have south the Lord God . Below I was L will both son I havest opened so kith note. A cold of the seeking of a slight that is likely or his flow for the community and the community of mission that research solval is known openid will dead thomat of his essentially be assisted in the trif of si and the second of the permitted in The second section of the second section is a second section of the second section sec

^{1 4} lp t 18

m.T

THE PROPHETS.

34

tion, hoping for no comfort. "So thou art to them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice and can play well on an instrument" had been the explanation of their attitude towards the prophet long before. Even now in their despair this was how they sought him, hoping, perhaps, for a moment's distraction, for something that would occupy their self-devouring thoughts. And this was what he proclaimed to them—no dirge, no wail of mourning, no outery like that of Jeremiah: "Behold, and see if any sorrow is like unto my sorrow." Such a cry, no doubt, was what they expected, what would have most soothed their aching increase it, and lay no famine upon you"-"the waste cities shall be filled with flocks of men." Best of all, " A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; I will put my spirit within you, and cause ye to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God." Strange message to follow the crowning disaster of a race, its destruction according to all precedent and every probability! Great Nineveh had fallen utterly, great Babylon was soon to And no restoration came to these vast empires and thrones. But to little Jerusalem there was proclaimed another fate; and after thousands of years, after renewed and repeated destruction more complete, and a dispersion still more hopeless, the scattered descendants of the captives of Babylon, scattered in every corner of the earth-forming a part of every nation, yet never united to any still hold that promise, and lift up their eyes towards the little land which could not hold a tithe of them, yet which mourns for them and waits for them the the error trace

^{*} I will set a real Sarph of over a character shall feel them

(value or and Davie shall edition and to shall be them shall or

And the Lewis and a solution of a solution o

¹⁾ lease, in principal transfer to the thirte, the principal transfer to the thirte, the principal transfer to the thirte transfer the principal transfer transfer the principal transfer transf stands out for a moment clear amid all the terrible visions and smoke of destruction. "I will raise up for 346

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

- "I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone.
- "And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them.
- "Then said He unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say unto the wind, Thus saith the Lord God;

"Come from the four winds, O breath,

"And breathe upon these slain that they may live.

"So I prophesied as He commanded me, and the breath came unto them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army."

tion. The prophet himself did not live to see it. With him and with them as individuals, God had His own methods as He has now and always. But to Israel and Judah the only promise possible was that of renewed the everlasting dominion over the heart of man, of the holy city, the scene of our Lord's life and death. But by the rivers of Babylon at that dread moment the human heart had had enough of tragedy. Isaiah himself could but vaguely foresee that wonderful picture which he made, "searching what and what manner of things the spirit that was in him did prophesy," strangely revealing in the midst of those mists of glory the countenance marred more than any man of which he has left so affecting a portrait. What they needed now was the assurance of restoration and blessing and joy.

Nor was that assurance vain even in fact. The return of the Jews from captivity nearly seventy years after, was such an event as is unparalleled in history. The strenuous devotion of men born in exile to that everlonged-for, never-forgotten city, and the strange impression made on the minds of the conquerors, by what means we are left uninformed, which made that return possible, forms an occurrence unique in the world, bearing no analogy to any other ever known. Nothing could have spended less possible, nothing ever was more true. It was worden one ghate fall the cark borizon of the captives with exaltation, and it was ence facte the opporfullty of the race to chin in a family every ancient professional blassing on pp thrity in taken, as we kros, ar arrest to the society of Parallel Association at t t in terms base 'et miller jierry, taught by extra section and the section of the section of

And some the second of the sec

THE PROPHETS.

 \mathbf{m}

85

national history when all seemed over and the eclipse of their nation and city was to every mortal vision a catastrophe without hope, there must have been something in those measurements and details, the chambers for priests unborn, the great splendid courts and galleries for a worship extinguished and a people scattered to the ends of the carth—something in the mingled impossibility yet certainty, that dazzle of the contradictory which is in all human affairs but in none so much as in the history of the Jews—which uplifted the hearts of the captives as additional interest to the always significant suggestion of an entrance thus hermet cally closed: by which the Prince of Princes has gone in, by which it may be He came forth to His agony in the garden, and by which, in the wonders and mysteries of a future of which we know so little. He may yet return.

And here closes the first portion of the Instory of Jerusalem, the little city on the hillside, like so many others of the little cities which still cover the hills of Palestine. The small tough fortress that David took has grown into a beautiful and splendid metropolis under our eyes-not vast like Babylon, or Nineveh, those ancient centres of the world-but with a splendour of the heart, the cradle of music, of poetry and song; with palace and temple, not perhaps so beautiful as those of Greece that were yet to be, but pervaded by a meaning far more beautiful, the presence of a God one and supreme, the spirit of a law, unique in its tenderness as in its justice. We have seen this city rise and fall again with all the vierssitades of haman contrariety and changeableness and the captices of a specially perverse and individual race. It has polated forth such pagins of trium.ph and wirangs of lineritation is fever were aftered to the charter between and new it has fallen, falle traces lest become a will complete ress that the state of the Parker Controls. these described we call the challethat a me, it is the analytic to the ble present sold by a self-toinglist, the property of lines to be a confidence of the transfer 11 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 toll wer tes de la final lines that seem to cut the parchment, the walls and towers of another temple more great than Solomon's. Could it ever be that these promises should be fulfilled and that great sanctuary once more stand dazzling under the Eastern sun?

PART III.—THE RETURN AND RESTORATION.

CH. I.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION. 355

The apocryphal writings, which, though without any

I.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION. 357

the beloved kintheless which would not contain and life. Was it the aged Daniel from his retirement who came forth, with perhaps a roll of old parchment carried after him in its case, to show the monarch his own very name in the fading lines a century and a half old? "Cyrus, my shepherd," of whom God said "I guided thee though thou hast not known me." In the criticism of recent times the mere fact that Cyrus is named is evidence enough that the writer cannot have been Isaiah but another man, the contemporary of the great conqueror: but that would be an exceedingly poor argument if Daniel or some other influential Jew actually possessed the roll of Isaiah's prophecy in which these words appeared. It is, we believe, a tradition that this was the way in which the attention of Cyrus was secured,

THE RETURN AND RESTORATION. 359 1.]

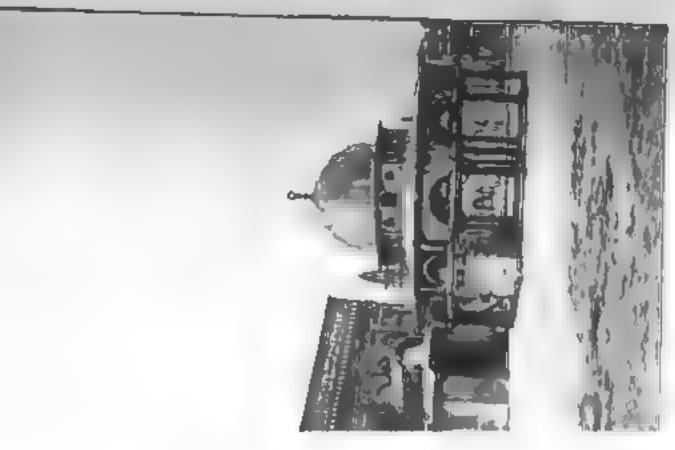

month had coun in tage but would return joyful carry-860

JERUSALEM.

CHAP.

That some forty-two thousand of the captives (as stated by Ezra: the summing of the items does not come to this, but to somewhere about thirty thousand; it is very possible, however, that the children of the many families made up the larger number) had the courage to set out, and to take upon themselves the task of building up that great Temple which had occupied Solomon in its first construction for years, and so many other kings in constant reparation and restoration-is a proof of the great vitality and earnestness of the national life among The very old and the very young were in the vast party which moved slowly off from Babylon, and from all the villages and cities in which they dwelt, the entire community of their countrymen, no doubt, coming forth to see them start, watching with eyes, half wistful, half ashamed, the heroic remnant which was giving up everything for home. Many must have thus looked on who had not the conrage to go with them, or who were so bound with the engagements of life, the cares of wealth, or those of peverty, as to be unable to join the Many, no doubt, had compounded for their want denergy by buying back reptives from their misters. as is afterwards stated, and by undertaking the expenses of the journey Loral on project country is on a The prince. Zemblib Lad the high priest Jeshie Live left little musicians, "children of Asaph," besides the laymen rich and poor who formed the main body. "Two hundred singing men and women" are mentioned among the servants, in addition to these sacred singers of Asaph's race, of whom there were a hundred and twenty-eight—so that the great caravans must have had a sufficient choir of performers, for those songs with which they becomed the were 864

1.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION. 868

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

delays incident to such a crowd, and difficulties in the supply of food, besides the opposition of here and there an irate commune to their passage, the enmity which the very friendship of one town would raise in another, as well as the constant risk of sickness among the family groups, those swift epidemics of the East smiting down the travellers. And when they arrived on the northern heights from which they could first see Jerusalem, that point where the mailed warriors of the Middle Ages shouted and wept in the transport of their end attained, what cries, what wailings must have burst from the expectant crowd! That heap of ruins on the two hills, ' calm Olivet standing like a sentinel over them, the valley of the Tyropæon cutting like the jagged stroke of an axe between the upper and the lower city, the lowlines of humble roofs hid among the heaps of destruction, what a sight to meet the eyes of the exiles! Was this the Mount Zion which was the joy of the whole earth, compretly built, beautiful for situation, the city offered them so sad a welcome, standing up roofless and supported by piles as summer dwellings, would be much more wholesome, as well as pleasant, than any kind of encampment among the ruins, extensive enough to have lodged the people in strength. We remember to have been told that these summer tabernacles were not only for coolness but to escape the scorpions which swarmed among the ruins of older and greater buildings surrounding a little modern town of Palestine. The tabernacles of Jerusalem in that blazing autumn weather, perched high over the broken walls and heaps of indiscriminatoruin, would, no doubt, have this reason too.

From that time forth the smoke of the evening and the morning sacrifice began to rise again over Moriah, never to be wholly extinguished save for a brief interval, until the great sacrifice, of which these rites were but the shadow, had been accomplished there.

It was not, however, till the second year that Zerubbabel and Jeshua found themselves in a position to begin the rebuilding of the Temple. They had not only to clear the site, during the course of which they would, no doubt, find much valuable naterial in those stones in which, as sings a poet of the intivity. Got's people found pleasure, and in the very dist which was dear, but to provide the finer satial or the integer, the ced rss. a Solcia, I dijera ed tea lare indifor wh, Litherma estima et al espara et igim substitute the second time And the section is a set or and the (1 1 , , 1 (5) do t t 1 res 1 1 te en te the rebuilding, while all about the valleys of Hinnom must have been heard the shoutings and strainings of the workmen who had dragged the great logs across the plain of Sharon and by all the mountain ways towards the city. The Levites were appointed to the charge of the work, and as soon as the area was cleared and the masons, no doubt also supplied by Tyre, that home of industry, were ready to begin, a great solemnity was held once more upon Moriah. The people flocked again from their villages, the consecrated overseers were all in their places, the builders clustered about the great foundation stone. Something of the glory of old must work, to which they were commissioned by the g God who had distinguished their race through all years of human history, and the great king magnaniz and powerful who was His servant though he knew I not. The past and the future crowded upon thez they sang and shouted in their corner of little Palest Was it not the greatest act taking place in the wl world, though that world, like Cyrus, knew it not?

After this joyful beginning however, the work soon brought to a pause. The people round had a the return of the Jews with envious and evil egather return of the Jews with envious and evil egather return of the Jews with envious and evil egather fered, are believed to have been the inhabitant square, then nearest neighbours and in a sense kaish a cived compliny in which a few legither terminants to be not Usraelites and so carved themselves and to stack a second so carved themselves and the stack as a vive a toolen statistic that they were longened by the Catalactic and the attention and the civil is via the laboration of all the adoption of the Catalactic and the adoption of the Catalactic and the association of the cities and the control of the catalactic and the cities and the control of the catalactic and the

,

•

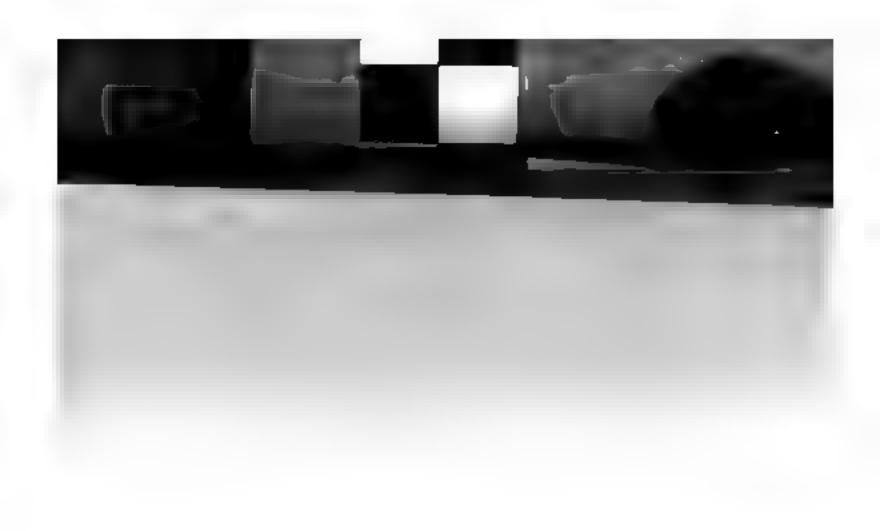

.

1

- 1

which lasted for many years. They despatched letter had seized his throne. Orders were accordingly sent to stop the building, which was done by force, the Jews in Jerusalem being too few and unwarlike to stand against

Temple would seem to have put an end to this disastrous had gone up the hill to inquire into this wonderful undertaking, "Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls?" he asked. The meeting took place, in all probability, outside the northern gate, as was usual unless, indeed, the satrap, in his surprise, pushed on into the interior, into the midst of the very courts themselves, not yet closed to Gentile feet, where the Tyrian masons were building, and the Levite overseers measuring and planning. Zerubbabel, of the house of David, a prince of a dynasty which had outlived many empires, and Jeshua the high priest, scarcely less dignified in descent, still more so in office, with many others of the leaders of the Jews, heads of well-known families, met the Syrian prince with a demeanour which he, in high authority himself, would be able to appreciate. "We asked their names also to certify them," he says, reporting to his master their statement that their pertaission to rebaild the Temple of the God of heaven came from Cyrus himself, who had given them back out of his treasuries "the golden and silver vessels of the house of God which Nebuchadnezzai tock "Nov. therefore," says the Satiap, "of it seem good to the king, let there be scarch readon, the king's treas no house, which there is a Baladon, a later a basis. Inter must and been the essential the second of the sec and the state of the state of the state laise of the die teacher to the contract of the sertict disable to the act Nille so a kall to the second of the 1 1 5 1 1 1 5 1 1 1 and so as the term of S 10 (51) S 1, 11 [1 hers I to It s to I roused by the exhortations of the prophets, the strong outcry of Haggai, the happy visions of Zechariah. There is a serious interest in all he writes, a desire to do justice to such singular enthusiasts, and to have a sufficient warrant for their work, with which he has no inclination to interest.

dained by Cyrus are much larger than those of the Temple of Solomon, but, on the other hand, "the day of small things" mentioned by Zechariah would evidently seem to refer to the comparative insignificance of the building; and Haggai asks, "Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do you see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as noth ing?" This, however, was said while the work was still incomplete, and when the two or three venerable fathers who might survive, if any such were, had shaken their heads in the habitual usage of old age over the possibility that such raw new walls could ever equal the Temple which they saw, more glorious than ever reality was, through the mists of childish remembrance far away. Such old men as could have seen "the house in her first glory" must by that time have reached the extreme limit of mortality, nearly a bundred years. It is very possible, as so often happens in human affairs, that both of the differing views on this subject may be true—that the second Temple was larger than the old according to the stipulations of Cyrus, but that It was very far from being so rielly and layishly decrated, a thing almost certum in the car ast in esplits in another.

The record had stops at separal or of bong accomplished and the passal and trained a like begins. When the waster of order, proceed a cold is tory, a parely use at a seriety various toff far said to the stamped at the series to the accordance various various various to the cold to the series of the cold to the series of th diate follower of theirs, and may simply have been put together by Ezra from notes or oral report. The greater part of the generation which had built the Temple, and re-established the city, had passed away before he ap-lon, apparently holding office in the government there, although his special studies had been in the law of Moses. But the fact that "the king granted him all his request" shows that he had attained, as so many of the Hebrews did, great influence and favour with the reigning potentate. This is calculated to have been Artaxerxes or Xerxes Longimanus, the grandson of Darius, so that the space of rather more than half a century occurred between the completion of the Temple under the protecting edict of Darius, and the visit of Ezra. In the meantime there had occurred in Shushan, which was the residence of the great Persian monarch, that curious story of Providential guidance as well as palace intrigue which we call the book of Esther, a proof of the very general prevalence of Jewish influence in the highest centres of Babylon, which, no doubt, accounts for the almost invariable protection and favour with which Jerusalem was regarded. Ezra had, no doubt, heard rumours of the laxify of morals in the holy city, and that there were some points in which reformation was most important if the independence and unity of the nation were to be preserved. It would almost seem as if ne had had his anxieties before the king and drawn that moranch into a certain svenjathy with them, so that Artisters shall self the hisband of Psther, and naturally the state problems, a state of the was letto la testa sata special missiona, to estimate the part estate the estate tion of with, in it people, the comerr rate and experience are the later ted some natural rends et Lengthelle, and the length information. That he had a very special mission for the Jews is, however, evident from the fact that he was permitted to take with him as many of the remaining exiles as desired to go, some two thousand in all—

JERUSALEM.

880

[CHAP.

contribution from the king and his counsellors "freely offered" this time "unto the God of Israel," a title, no doubt, proudly imposed by the Israelite official as claiming the great God of heaven to be especially his own. The mandate is urgent and detailed, ordering a subsidy up to "an hundred talents of silver, and to a hundred measures of wheat, and to an hundred baths of wine, and to an hundred baths of oil, and salt without prescribing how much" which was to be supplied by the local government "beyond the river." Ezra would be a most welcome visitor to Jerusalem with all those treasures. By this time the common tenor of life must have been re-established there, although, no doubt, much was yet to be desired, and little had been done towards the "beautifying of the Temple," the purpose for which the gifts of Artaxerxes were made.

The work of Haggar and Zeebarrah was long over, and

tion to them of another conquering people whose faith was in one great God of heaven like theirs produced a commission than anything that could concern Jerusalem and Judah. It would seem to have given him a charge over the Samaritans also, who in a certain sense knew the laws of God and man imperfect way retained the sacrificial system and the worship of the Jews, and also over all scattered knots of people settled on the south side of the Euphrates who might be of Jewish origin and faith. But Jerusalem was the chief point of the journey, and we hear of none of his other proceedings outside its walls.

JERUSALEM.

CHAP.

He had scarcely arrived, however, and made his sacrifices, and paid his vows, when the princes and heads of the restored community came to him with their statement of the circumstances which had alarmed the visitor when he heard of them in distant Babylon, and which filled the magnates of Jerusalem with anxiety and perplexity. Not only the common people but the priests, the Levites, the very princes themselves were involved in this national offence. It was the beginning of a change which they felt might bring back all the exils and the offences of old, for who could secure the children from following their mothers' faith, or ranke fine Hebrews of those who had been brought up to consider Bail as equally so red and lowerful with the great took who would not leave a remnant to escape, seems at once to have penetrated the heart of the multitude. No doubt rumours of the special object of the great envoy had already spread among them, quickening their apprehension. Only a small portion of them had really offended as yet, but they were all so closely related, and the sense of their unity as a nation was so strong, that the sin which struck at the very root of that unity and special

that trambled at the warde of the God of Ternel hopers

"In the ninth month, on the twentieth day of the month," that is to say in December, the rainy season—and prob-

ment, and would probably consent with the patience of a creature born to slavery, to the fate which she would know must have come sooner or later. It was according to all modern codes a severe act; but it was one of the number necessity and wisdom for the interests of the Jews, and for the preservation of their national lite—the thing, which having learned more or less their terrible lesson, they now felt must be preserved at all hazards and by any sacrince

Whether Ezra disappeared altogether from the scene after this trenchant act of reformation, whether he went back to Babylon to give in his report, and discharge himself of the responsibility of the supervision committed to his hands, we are not told; but many years elapse before we find him again in the exercise of his office as sembe and teacher in Jerusalem A certain modern touch is in his character and appearance altogether, which is that of a man full of supreme earnestness for his work, and perception of national necessities, yet capable as a few reformers have been in all igos of socing the advantige of a startling appeal to the popular imagination, a certain histrion is a. It we live ase the word, a pernags stable lider custration of carteeling, a cutburst raying all the teres of the New Fill I discover to te speak. done of a pestion the section pairs at to be produced, the glassolite of a settle enotion ex-Lass I Torres Fit to Leasting dust is then this inglification of the stret in a soul to sit to the telephone to tractor is the the rate of the

887

of that prayer, poured forth as on the impulse of the moment in the shock of the news, by the great visitor clothed in all the power of Babylon, who had come up with joy to worship in the city of his fathers, and had been there suddenly prostrated by the terrible information communicated to him. The effect upon the imagination and conscience of the assembled Jews was tremendous, as he had intended it to be; and yet in no

CHAPTER II

NEHEMIAH.

HE mission of Ezra was a special one of deep importance to the Jewish nation as cutting off the possibilities of relapse into the one master-sin which had heretofore been their bane, and cleansing their internal economy; but it was brief and sudden and involved no external advance either in the great constructions going on on all sides, or the defence of the nation from its outward enemies. Another personage very unlike Ezra, but still more distinct and full of character, now appears against that tumultuous buckground of the Jewish capital, so full of rebellions and sudden repentances, the rising and falling of a popular tide, more marked, perhaps, in its small stream of existence than it would have been within more extended limits. The Jews in Babylon fall altogether out, in a few generations, from the story of their nation; they had made their choice to remain there, in some cases, no doubt, willingly, in some with painful submission to a bondage of circumstances which they had not strength or courage to break. They had been on the verge of a universal massacre when saved by the interposition of Esther, they were subject to all the vagaries of a monantle's apure and the hatred of a vizier, but at the same time they were wealthy and safe from want and the dangers of every day, which satisfaction and joy blinded them a little to the dangers still surrounding that capital of their race, replanted in the midst of enemies, and with very ineffectual means of defence. They had already subscribed and offered a great deal for this vast national work: it is very probable that they now felt they had done enough.

7P1 : 1

A 1 . A 1 .

n.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION. 391 his period of service. "I had not been aforetime sad in responsible authority in the city, but only a council of rulers, chiefly priests, with, perhaps, the advice and help of Ezra, whom we find once more in Jerusalem after an interval of twenty years, on the arrival of his successor in the Scripture records. Nehemiah took with him no such Jewish contingent as that which had followed Ezra: a significant fact as showing that the number of those willing to undertake hardship and unsettlement of life for the sake of their religion and nation was now exhausted. But the new Tirshatha had with him instead an escort of "captains of the army and horsemen" to guard him from the danger of the way.

For three days after his arrival Nehemiah would seem to have rested from his journey and apparently said nothing of his special object. We may understand that he was received and acknowledged at once as in authority over the city, the priests being in no condition to oppose any of his requirements, and probably having no wish to do so for the succour of a strong officer of the empire backed by certain spears, would be no small comfort to them in thee of the citimael strike round about, and the machineters of creates not powerful enough to affect be continually the continual value of this period of rest below:

1. Affect here The second of the citimael strike of the still in the citimael and went of the citimael strike of the citimael and went of the citimael strike of the citimael and went of the citimael strike of the citimael and went of the citimael strike of the citimael and went of the citimael strike of the citimael and went of the citimael strike of the citimael and went of the citimael and ci

Siloam and the gardens of Onhel till he reached the

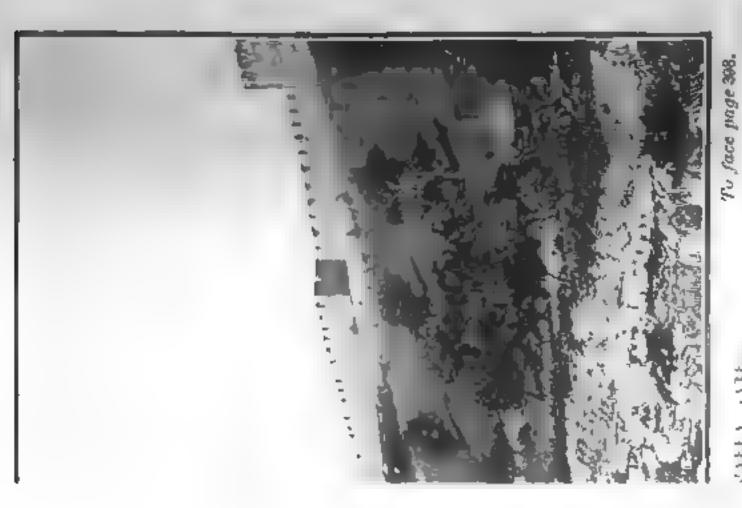

A OVE SETS F

And then the plan, which, no doubt, he had matured in his mind during the long days and nights of his journey, probably with the help of some rude image of the beloved city such as that upon Ezekiel's tile, or the detailed and often-repeated descriptions upon which the childhood of the sons of the captivity was nourishedwas carried suddenly and at once into effect. the common crowd opened its eyes in the morning there was already a murmar of activity in the city, of the masons' mallets and the movements of the labourers. and the sound of the great stones rolled or lifted into place, proceeding from every quarter. If there were any of Sano, flat's or Tobach's belongings in that large clumber in the Temple which Eliashib had cleared out for them of the stores for which it was properly intended -how astomshed must they have been to see Eliashib hamself superintending the building of his portion of the wall, he and his brethren with their robes girded, if not with trowel and mallet in their own hands, yet, no doabt, busy in the hunbler occapation of bringing up are to be trusted or not it is difficult to make out; the important matter is that more than thirty groups of labourers, each under the command of a well-known member of the community, began at once on the great work: each pursuing his neighbours in the emulation of eager and patriotic toil, not a matter of words but of

JOB

When, however, Sanballat saw that his floutings had no effect he and his friends seem to have held a consultation whether it would not be a wise thing to make a raid upon Jerusalem before the fortifications were completed. No doubt there were plenty of spies and intormers on both sides ready to run with a piece of news from oce to another, and Nehemiah was not long in Learning of the intended mover cut against him on lders on the neith side, which was that most open to attack, would also be aware of the countries and goings, the bar so tion different quart is diswing together. midding a print show specific rising ground, the little tion a lossific, for either windle Kedion all you pure the control of the tail shouts ed there expressed the sons sin willstas a for the transfer of the transfer about in its a and is to distance to the entire the rend from refrection in the and the state of t r1 r + +1 . 1

1111 1111

II.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION.

had been called up from the country to aid in the work were full of alarm for what might befall them as they returned to their villages, especially those who dwelt upon the north road towards Samaria—an alarm increased by urgent messages from their homes, from timorous wives or parents left behind, begging them to return in the encampment on the hill where the Samaritans lay and looked on, and raged and wondered, it is clear that the Tirshatha was there with his trumpeter ready to sound the alarm, so that every man might throw down his trowel or his hod and eatch up his bow or draw his sword, while he rushed towards the centre of action. Never was a patriotic drama more strenuous, picturesque, and spirit-stirring, with such mingled sounds of labour and war, of a strong race on the alert, valiantly and cheerfully contending for its life. The men were inspired at once with patriotism and strong indignation and a sense that this was the crisis upon which the fate of his right in virtue of his office to receive from those under him an abundant revenue for his support and that of his household—he had accepted nothing. Former governors had been chargeable to the people, "had taken bread and wine, besides forty shekels of silver; yea, even their servants have rule over the people; but so did not I, for the peace of God." He describes besides, in this sometimes almost contemptuous summary, how he had held a sort of royal state, an open table, entertaining like a king, a hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers. daily "besides those that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us," a curious addition. Thus he lived, always with a lofty scorn of all meanness, giving freely, accepting nothing, with perhaps, we may divine, a certain scorn as of a high official of the empire, for the pettiness of the province, notwithstanding his passionate devotion to the holy place and to the faith of his fathers. Such a mingling of high enthusiasm for a great object, with an impassioned disdam of all the small self-interests that gather about it and the unclevated persons who carry it out, is not in usual in great national.

II.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION. 403

tions falling into certain perforations in it, which rises and drops by means of a wooden key. The procession was attended, each half of it by the priests with the trumpets, and a choir of singers, singing, perhaps, those songs of the pilgrims with which the long and dreary way from Babylon had been lightened. They circled the city from the great pools of Gilion in the west, and the stairs of the city of David, that bridge that traversed the Tyropæon valley, and along the irregular length of the north wall whence they could see the teuts of their Samaritan enemies on the hill of Samuel or Mount Scopas, so otten thereafter to be crowned with the armies of more formidable invaders: while the other party made the round on the southern side above the valley of Hinnom, and along the front of the Temple, both coming together with whatever ensigns of triumph they might carry, with the glowing colour of Eastern gala. diess, and the white robes of the Levites, and the sound of the singing and shouts of the multitude, until the marching lines met on the lamparts of the Temple wall, opposite Olivet, and stood awhile to make their thanksgiving, governor and princes and priests and people; "and the singers saig lond" for every evil prophecy was corto-aded and every fear queryled and the work a certain shed, so that all the variations in sec. "Also that a they officed so than in escapition and for toolded adotte a constant diposition waves Iscandithe environces, to the exordent people wept." But the Tirshatha, wise and wholesome man, would not have his triumph spoiled. He was a peremptory ruler, strong in his ideas of work and recom-

11.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION.

fat, and divide the sweet, and send portions to those for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto the Lord: neither be ye sorry; for the joy of the Lord is your failure: and we can scarcely help thinking of Knox and his followers and of the Covenants of Scotland, when we read the list of "those who sealed" and "entered into a curse and into an oath to walk in God's law "-that is, who invoked a curse upon their own heads if they did not keep that you. No doubt it gave a solace to the heart of Nehemiah to leave them so bound against all further possibilities of transgression-bound by seal and signature, though few of them, we may believe, could write-signs of a bargain which would be, it was to be hoped, more effectual than private resolution: to do all they ought to do, to make no mixed marriages, hold no market on the Sabbath day, and maintain the ordinances of the Temple, the sacrifices and the tithes, the first-fruits and offerings. When these vows were put upon parchment and laid up in the holy place was not all done that could be done to bind a people at once so fickle and so strange 9

But whether the Tirshatha remained to govern the city, or whether he went back to pour out again the wine of Artaxerxes, or to be promoted after all his labours to send more at port, it post in the imperial government we know not by the post of the intends here so far as the Script in history is a crimed, heaving derivation in out-will accept this yit hither that ghost of heiself, with one this, in a critical contribution to help the vitually so to convil as alone to help the result of the considered part of the considered part of the considered part of the contribution of the considered part of the contribution of the contribution.

CHAPTER III.

them does the curious mixture of pure legend show itself in mingled extravagance and subtility, as in some of the

III.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION.

413

The critics who consider this to be the way in which the whole Scriptural record was built up have not apparently remarked this real illustration of what the outagainst many incursions of the continually modified and altered empire of the north: until altered itself by that partition of the ancient world which follows the conquests of the Greeks. There is, however, a special bitterness in the many wars of devastation which swept over the devoted city, which adds something more than the mere horrors of invasion, terrible as these were, to her tragic history. The continual insults to her religion, the swine sacrificed on the altar, the overthrow of all her characteristic customs, done with a fury and ferocity which seem special to this place alone, is very remarkable. One would imagine that the very existence of such a stronghold of national worship folded in the hills was an affront and offence to the world about. They left the plains on either side, to crush that sentiment of freedom, of individuality, and what was still more, of unbroken hamemorial faith, which stood in the middle

the heroes of Judah, the mighty men of valour, David and his captains, stout Joab who feared no face of man. They had to form their band and flee to the mountains forthwith, leaving their little abandoned town to the mercy of the invaders: but when they were protected by the invulnerable hills the party of the patriots grew daily. Intolerable oppression had at last roused beyond endurance a too long suffering race. Some, we are told, not brave enough for open resistance, fled to the wilderness hoping to be safe there, but were overtaken by an expedition from Jerusalem who assailed them on the Sabbath day. The multitude, unwarlike, unofficered probably, clinging with heroic weakness to their rule. would not fight on that holy day, and were massacred like sheep. "They answered them not, neither cast they a stone at them, nor stopped the places where they lay hid, but said, Let us die in our innocency: heaven and earth shall testify for us that ye put us to death wrongfully." "A thousand souls of men," whole famihis, including wives and children (who probably made resistance impossible) thus perished without striking a blow.

These meek religious that visit visit visit visit and storm and Judich as a fined. If him has away in When Matheus in a list factor of the visit visit of them said to another it visit is some of the action and that factor is visit visit visit visit of them that them the control of the visit vi

III.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION. 417

and narvarea minds the dominion of idole. Thou had

itish nations, when Damaseus and then Nineveh and then Babylon were the homes of the conquerors, and Greeks and Romans were unknown. Lysimachus, Nicanor, Gorgias, are the titles of the opposing generals, Menchaus is an apostate priest, "Quintus Memmius and Titus Manhus, ambassadors of the Romans" send letters to the Jews. All is changed from the old world, yet there is little change in the one obstinate self-contained people which hobis the central place, though visibly surrounded by supernatural help as it never was in the older authentic days.

The same thing had happened to Jerusalem which had happened to her before. The city "lay void as a wilderness, the sanctuary was trodden down, and aliens kept the stronghold: the heathen had their habitation in the place: and joy was taken from Jacob, and the pipe with the harp ceased." But the people were no longer captive nor languishing terrified in scattered villages. They ranged the country outside as David's bands did, under their bold leader "who was like a hon," always with then eyes fixe hipon the deserted domes and towers, the si it in labschite city over which the flag of the concorporated from the brights of Zion. Other cities a committee to the new solution so preed as sacred as this. To this of the man to the condition in those strins opticle turks ugaish to ce also a various to control in Lalways solution and a return to be a least a contifuil to the transfer down that the property of tes to be a little of the organization of the raters to c st and the street

419

421

JERUSALEM.

422

[CHAP.

by the unexpected favour of the Persian emperors to have set up their little royalty again in the face of Cyrus and Cambyses-and the race of David had sunk, it would seem, under the level of what is required for a ruler even in a subordinate position. The race of Levi had survived in greater strength. The families of the high priests could not lose their sacred right of domination descended to them from far antiquity. long before kings were thought of and from the direct appointment of God. Far more than the scattered and impoverished house of David had they retained their traditions and their power: and while the family of Zerubbabel sinks into the rank of private persons that of his colleague the priest goes on in unquestioned authority. Eliashib, though not blameless in the matter of life and discipline, had succeeded Jeshua in Ezra's time, while the sons of Zerubbabel had gone back to the original pastures at Bethlehem, from which David had been taken to be made a king. And when we come to the time of the Maccabees it is in a priestly (maily that the hero, or rather heroes, father and sons enabliting or hother in valour and patriotism-and the city in a sociessor of the clavillous shipherd of

ite) Antipater the father of the great Herod. During

III.] THE RETURN AND RESTORATION.

no harm to that strangely beloved and defended shrine. He restored Hyrcanus to be chief priest, and taking from the Jews the cities they had seized in better times, "con-while beautifying the great centre of the most intensely exclusive religion of the world. "Here," says Josephus, "is a mountain whose summit lifts itself to a vast height, and close by a hollow at its base, a gloomy cavern opens from below, in which a yawning chasm descends abruptly to an immeasurable depth, continuing a vast collection of still water hitherto found unfathomable by any length of line." Thus is described the picturesque cliff and bubbling waters of Banus, once known by the name of Casarea Philippi, the most northern spot, so far as we know, of our Lord's journeyings, where Peter's great confession was made. Perhaps these superlative adjectives applied thus to a woodland dell may make it more compreheasable that the soft slopes on the northern side of Jerus dem should appear to Pompey's troops a "frightful ray me "

The reader knows what wonderful event happened in the last days of Herod, and how, believing as he did, that One was born who was sent by God to be King of the Jews. One of whom the prophets had written, and ct whom his learned conneillors could tell him even the very place. I the prefaced both this strange Eastern petent, to tach some as put touth a placity and a dreadtu hast to millity it have added decree of heaven. The teach ather, showed, but he had been numbeliever we algorithms. The second artists the term was that I tallon, of stillwisthe tari the an it and forefold. who lefa, heighers in the subto the profit to the constension the production of the production Expert to the point of the contract of the con the see it between it sals tid portion of Palestine, unchanged in the divergency of faith which become conspicuous after the captivity, and ho ling an attitude of hostility more or less marked, though kept by imperal supervision from all overt acts. The afterence, always addicall to before between that maked race, which, if only half Jew, was yet not pagar, and a star i on its traditions as much as decathed attoristic act and the ottomate of a start and as kaded of Judah, had consolicated atoms to the attraction of a start and as kaded of Judah, had consolicated atoms to the start and appoint a start the position. The Jews have no deal against the Sam et as " That the certhern part of the kaded on the absolication of the start of the kaded on the association of the day of the start of the kaded on the association of the start of the kaded on the association of the start of the kaded on the association of the start of the kaded on the association of the start of the kaded on the association of the start of the

PART IV.—THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

CHAPTER I.

THE SON OF DAVID.

ple that walked in darkness had already seen a great light. True plety had found refuge among them, even before the Light that lighteth every man had been revealed.

It was among these simple northern folk that God found the pure and tender maiden who was to be the instrument of His purpose. She was found in no beautiful medieval hall, half oratory, half palace, such as are those seenes in which painters have enshrined her lowly sweetness. Was it, perhaps in a rock-hewn chamber in a humble dwelling of Nazareth, dim and cool and impervious to the blazing day; or, perhaps, as she sat and mused in a quiet moment with her pitcher at the well, that the great radiance of the angel came into the quiet, and Mary heard those strange words which have mingled in the prayers of so many generations since then: "Hail, Mary, full of grace '". It was a greeting that troubled her, so much too reverential and important as it seemed for a humble villager, as if she were a great lady, when she he iid the after message, so much more wonderfill than any that was ever given to the greatest empress in the world, her sentiments seen, to have undergone a change. She wis no longer troubler as by a greeting more than wis but the little region of religion all things are possible. As soon as she became aware of wait to be entired with a discount colin of her ra, didd the Box the limit lefthe Led's all to be set extend honour the take the tree transactivet e is little to the line, the et, directional mass, necessitation, at to paraller Com-

It so a that he premare a treated marsely

Lo fitte proge 452,

the Transit

1.]

disturbed by any terrible sense of the miracle to be accomplished in her. The whole history of her race was miracu-

1.]

erer about to some. Nor is it necessary to account for her attitude and state of mind by special reference to the temper of her time. The pure-hearted and visionary girl, most delicate flower of human kind, is always more or less in the same mental condition, disturbed to be greeted as a princess, not disturbed by heavenly communication of a great mission, embarrassed by the one, finding the other even natural. Joan of Air was not surprised to find her self a captain and leader of the rimies of France. A devent and simple acquires once in property dilectors.

tion of Jew, Moslem, and Christian having so identified it through all the ages. There is a recess where the carpets and mats would be laid just opposite the rock-hewn manger, and the other rocky chamber in which the mild neighbours, half seen, chewing the cud in harmless

NAME OF A STREET WAS A STREET

pare week, stee, void land the reported to the second of t

1.]

439

descriptions, the possibilities of the scene. The dazzled told in a few words. Nazareth in its little amphitheatre of low hills, was the most tranquil home for the growing life, not like Bethlehem with the heights and hollows of Judah all spread around it, and the associations of its royal race—but a humble little town hid amid its trees, with little prospect of any kind, apart from all high roads and channels of communication with the great world. That yearly pilgrimage to Jerusalem would be the great event of its village life, a wonderful incident

MARKETTALL CHARLES OF OUR OF LARREN

and of located to located by for every day, a thing to be a constructed to the vent of was not the form of the vent of the Past, the first of the first terms of the

"Who by the vision splended "Is on his way attended "

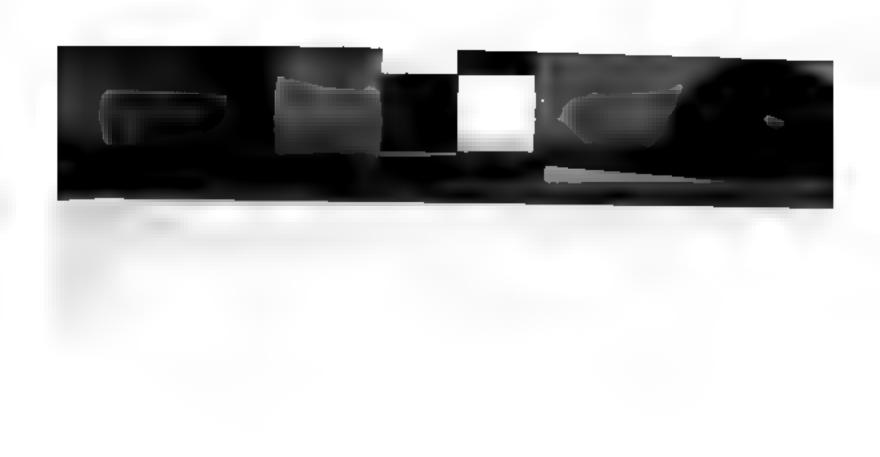

are too sacred in the silence of the record for other handling. And it is not till "the Lord" came "suddenly to his Temple" that the veil is for a moment withdrawn.

That Temple, the centre of Hebrew life, the symbol of national greatness, so often destroyed, so often restored, so long and mysteriously preserved through all the ages, takes a singular and altogether novel place in the experiences of the man Christ Jesus who came to abrogate it, and wind up the economy of which it formed so great a part. He seems to have sought it during the years of his ministry as the centre of all his own pursuits and occupations, but not with the feeling of those who took pleasure in the stones of Sion and to whom her very dust was dear. From the first the Temple is doomed in his eyes, a thing awaiting its destruction; and, if he gazes mournfully upon its beauty and splendour, something of the holy indignation of one to whom all the lost opportunities and divine purposes travestied and mistaken, of which it is the embodiment, are ever present, suing them to the end of their futile arguments with a cui bono? making them as fools to themselves by some piercing interrogatory. It was his first inspection of his Father's house, from the point of view of human intelligence, and, no doubt, his childhood afforded an excuse and explanation of that one appearance, which could not have been continued without premature revelation of his mission in the after years, when he must have come up with his family again and again, silent and dutiful, fulfilling all rights obsness. The boy could do what the young man could not without betraying himself.

I.]

And who shall penetrate the mystery of these silent years during which the Son of God grew in wisdom and stature in the calm of the little Galilean city? The still greater calm of the common human folk who surrounded that place and did not see what was the wonder that encircled Jesus, the son of Joseph, is the most wonderful thought of all. His brothers or cousins James and Judas must have known every feature of his life, and, perhaps, there is something in that familiarity of boyhood which gives to the after teachings of James, so concise and proceed, an are of more implet devotion to the outside duties of the Claistian are that, to the contemplation of the Diving Muster. But the right who walked those I make it its adjess I has all mening greeting. HIS A HEART AND A CALL HAVE AN S NOTE WAS OVER totle of titele sekt. Dineso nety from a conserve to a to be to ale penetrat that show you trat Mass selections? · Il had a ke to attend on an arrest odoubt-Late the result has continued in in among the william be a city to good the ast in-1 th, evel at 1 1 1 2 1 1 1 1 1

1.]

444

Perhaps she hoped, with fond denials to herself of any power that could harm one so divine, that the prophecy might fail; perhaps looked forward, with the all-submission of her own youth, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord," to the future so full of awe yet of hope, but knew

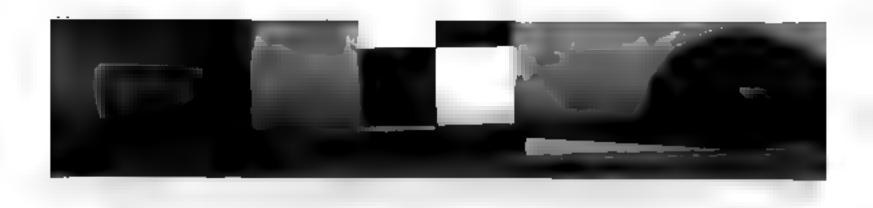

Perhaps she hoped, with fond denials to herself of any power that could harm one so divine, that the prophecy might fail; perhaps looked forward, with the all-submission of her own youth, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord," to the future so full of awe yet of hope, but knew nothing of all that was to be.

"Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" It would almost seem that he was surprised that she did not understand; as he was surprised, notwithstanding that he knew all that was in man, at the meapacity of his disciples long after to know what he could mean.

one chapter of history, which is of more importance to the human race than everything beside.

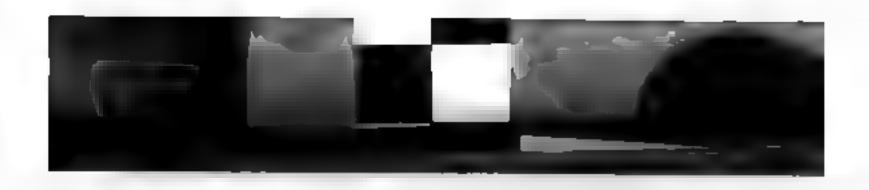

I venture, therefore, to take with reverence from the

t.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

second Elias, the voice of one crying in the wilderness, he who had been a hermit living in solitary places out of the way of men, had, no doubt, forgotten if in his desert life he ever knew, the aspect of his young kins man-until the Divine sign was given which pointed him out as the Lamb of God. After the revelation had been made, and his human life thus consecrated to his Inission, Jesus returned to his natural home; or rather it would be better to say, to the shores of the Lake of Galilee which was a day's journey from Nazareth, but with which he had probably some connection as so much of his time was spent there. His mother, perceiving that his life was now to be shaped on other lines, possibly as the time went on abandoned her household and followed him there in order to care for the wants of external necessity; or still more probably, her husband being dead, was naturally devoted to the care of her son and transferred herself to the place that suited him best. At the present moment, however, she was probably still resident in Nazareth, and he travelling towards that lowly dwelling-place when he paused at the village of Cana to attend, the marriage feast or Both Jesus was called and his disciples to the facing get, which was probably an important ever tom the country side, though the bridegroom was no wealthy in lither into the lymply a kindly connection eric gluon, of the sole of more position, solus guests

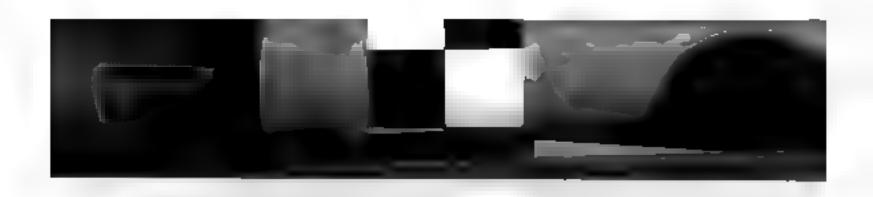

Pullissative to a local departure least, the world of the residence of the parameter of his and left desires a local department of the least the local department of the local

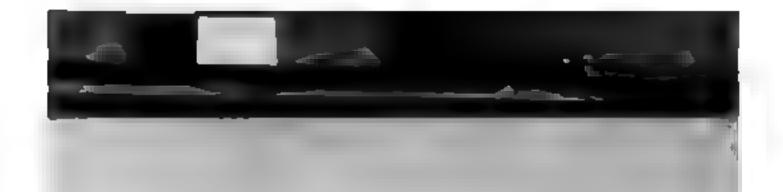

r.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

by some attraction they scarcely understood, who watched eagerly all his movements, to justify to themselves the step they had taken. There is no appearance that except by those two the miracle called for anything more than a little wonder, as to where the astonished bridegroom could have got it, that marvellous wine.

There has been Little said, I think, among the many diseassions of the supernatural, of the entire naturalness of these miracles. The initiatory miracle of all is, of course, the Person by whom they are performed; and if it can be proved that there have been others like him in this world, and that the records of history contain another who, according to the common judgment of humanity, may be placed by his side or near him, then I have no doubt the lesser argument might come in: but granted the far greater miracle of the two, the extreme naturalness of the others is, I think, to a simple mind, the most wonderful thing about them. We are disposed nowadays to smale at them as proofs, feeling that our Lord is his own transcendent proof and that in his great presence it is a kind of well meant and pious blasplemy to produce any fistingonials is it were to his charactar. The Christian of the machineth century we at probably be easier in last mand if the miracles we cluston of the pristion of a rain of his time, is the viscosite concernt in wearmen of their the filt occurs by a six per a Bitesen tetrt ist via dedate, for a convenience of the following state of a little con-Here is the first of the section of $\begin{bmatrix} 1 & 1 \end{bmatrix}$ $\begin{bmatrix} 1 & 1 \end{bmatrix}$ $\begin{bmatrix} 1 & 1 \end{bmatrix}$ e to statler

r.]

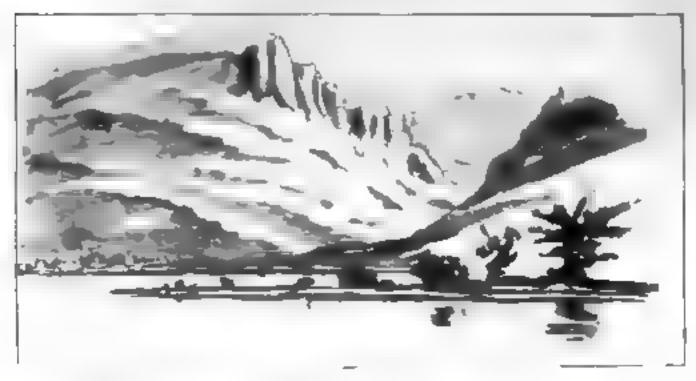

454

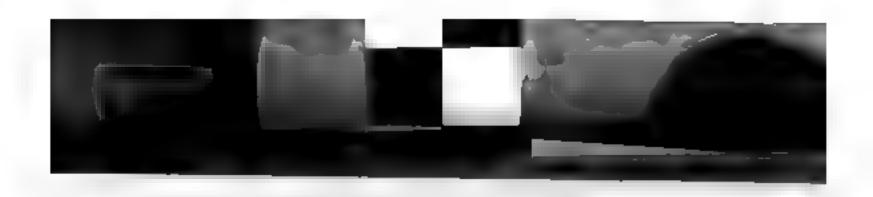

JERUSALEM.

[CHAP.

faded away in the quiet of the years as the bystanders perceived that the precocious boy was going no farther, but had sunk into the stillness of life as so many promising talents do. It might already be thought by some with disappointment that they hoped it was to have been he who should have redeemed Israel. This might probably cause still a certain currosity about his presence, a lingering desire to know whether after all the prophecy

IN I F A L. I THE HOLES FRATUR, AN WID HITHE SERMON ON THE

JERUSALEM.

456

CHAP.

The city lived by its sacred character, and the sale of the sacrifices must have been like the sale of indulgences in mediaval Rome. It was the centre of religious agitations also, and there was nothing the population loved so much as controversy and the long-drawn quibbles about the law, and questions of form and ceremonial. Jesus of Nazareth had many things yet to do before He came to the concluding scene of all, and this is a strong argument against the occurrence of a preliminary driving out of the traffickers in the Temple which would have made a commotion in the city, such as he does not seem to have desired so early in his career.\footnote{1}

We may be allowed in all reverence to imagine the manner of this first public visit to Jerusalem. If the full revelation of his own mission had only been opened out to his manhood after the Baptism, as seems to be indicated, the previous glimpses and intuitions of divinity rising at once that full maintestition; our Lord must now have begun to regard the Temple and the city which had hitherto been to him the "Fither's House"—in which he had fulfilled all the commanded rites, and performed the dutas member to upon all pions Hebrews—in addicated aspect. This wonderful Temple, the pride of the nation, was acrostory at Lithing about to dissolve and acrostory of the restory.

L

the Master's comment on this pride of the Jewish heart. And what strange words were those which came from the young Rabbi's lips? "There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." What an incredible, impossible thing to say! Herod's Temple stood in all its splendour before them, with its magnificent cloister, its beautiful gate, all the wonderful architecture of it, strong as the rock on which it stood -the courts full both of Jews and proselytes, every entry to the enclosure, every gate, filled with a moving, bright-coloured crowd. Perhaps the cicerones and eager guides searcely heard this sentence in the eagerness of their explanations, and it was not till the little band of closest friends went out to the Mount of Olives, and sat there round him, gazing upon the shining walls where Jerusalem lay fair in the sun, that he explained to them what he meant. His human heart was sore for that dreadful necessity. Far more than of what he was himself to suffer did he think of this, returning to it with an auguish of lamentation again and again. O Jarus ilem ! Jerusalem! to which every heart had turned, of white the captives in Babylon prayed that their ir a, hand might look tats a mining if ever they forgot not their clost pay and which that little band of pilproclaim procedules on castley piecel along the a great to do a first horizon their lake a if is a company that is a first light and that tices de we stola libratus go I cre le Wit dit we would that the transfer of the search primate the record of the state of though and the control of the transfer with the l r t1 ,t whit want. Thus it was that when the awaman of Samaria "

I.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

up by rubbish, which hes close under the north-east angle of the Temple wall; but I believe that another situation has been suggested, near the present Church of St. Anne, by recent explorations.

A line of arched cloisters, a little colonnade, supported on five sets of pullars, the "five porches" of our translation, was on the bank, with steps descending to the water -a beautiful feature of Eastern architecture, very usual and especially necessary where so much ablution is used. Underneath the shade of these arches lay the sick folk who were waiting for the "troubling of the water," the effervescence and influx, as now explained, of the spring. Jesus and his followers passing by, strangers arriving from Bethany or some other of the villages near, or taking the quiet walk of a Sabbath day's journey to that favourite olive garden on the other side of the brook, which was so good a place of repose after the crowds of the city, ascended into the grateful shade and coolness of the little arcade. And there in the stillness of the Sabbath, no cure to be hoped for on that day, lay the poor man on his carpet, who had spent so great a part of his life awaiting the mulacle. It is impossible not to feel that he was not a very worthy object of charity as we say, seeing that one of the earliest uses of Lis restored strength was to denounce his delayerer to the edging. But the eye of the Lord fell n on line, as hell carries allower act of misery right other dys or and roth others laying been ennedlemental messastings. I be tempted to shaft alone to the water and get their selves healed. er tre Sen all A. Bart er aght vens yn ethere. with no managed to the large terms of the managed by with a first but the person citle Decepter state wall like upon was unable to go to it, even so far as the descent of these

I.]

tions tighter, making of it, as has been already sai god in the place of their old idols whom they had grown. Most likely the apostles themselves were a tled at the breach of the rigid bond which was one of most marked points of the Jewish economy; but I there was no explanation given as of the parables of puzzled them, no announcement of a change of plant is curious to remark, in passing, that there was evidence objection on the part of the Jews to the dinner-par and entertainments of the Sabbath. These were mutted, it was the healing that was objected to, modern champions of the Sabbatic law act in a contractive, and would, no doubt, permit the healing wer possible, but not the feasts.

It would seem to have been this occasion that Je for the fast three legals to force this occasion that Je for the fast three legals to force the changed to need has coorse. The speaks force in the changed to need has again to a fast alto a fast the Gordon to a fast the fast three fasts, it is a fast three fasts, which is a fast three fasts and the fast three fasts and the fast three fasts and three fas

Licht, controversy rather than teaching. No room nor possibility here for any Sermon on the Mount, no tender langering of parable at d simulitude, of the images drawn from that similing nature around, the sower sowing in the field, the whate tower slaming on the hill. To Nacoderans he had already abandoned that maked grown ham, speken of a charge so fan mantal that it was not too mach to say by must be soon as a factor of a charge to the takes has so for those mall phaces of deals had a takes has after a court of the his own a citation of a series of the fine has a court of the his own a citation of a series of the fine has a court of the his own a citation of the series of the fine has a court of the his own a citation of the series of the fine series of the se natural student from internal evidence rather to have followed such an event as that of the raising of Lazarus. "As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." 4 The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God." What could be more appropriate than this had it been said after the miracle of Bethany? It is rash for an ignorant person, unacquainted even with the laws of Scripture criticism and taking the history of the gospels like any other old and irregularly constructed history, to venture upon a suggestion, but it seems to me that in a natural sense the address which is given in the seventh chapter of St. John (vn. 16, 24), as delivered on a later occasion, would be more appropriate if it were substituted here for the wonderful discourse which I have had the boldness to say appears rather to have followed such a miracle as that of the raising of Lazarus. When our Lord says "I have done one work and ye all marvel," his words seem to bear a natural reterence to something just performed of which all minds were full, rather than to an incident which, though in their experience and of the highest popular naterest, had happened several months before. It is tive that it was wonderful eneagh to have be aired to excess are upon his next pp and control is rus documental former commotor vitil so a select none propriate it it l standad ter 'et e menentin consider Witness and the Legiuse I I control to the Scobath les, to a contract pierit is in a legal to doubt. ricia k to the transfer of section 1 who had so boldly set the law at defiance. I do not know enough of Biblical criticism to be aware whether such a suggestion has ever been made before. I venture upon it solely from a literary and natural point of view. It looks like a speech delivered on the moment, while still nobody was able to forget that extraordinary act, and the fact almost more extraordinary to the common people, and thrust into greater importance still by the rulers, that he had done this, a thing forbidden on the expressive with all they were hearing and seeing, the company in which they spent their lives: while outside of all the multitude came and went, sometimes gathering in a mass when the voices dropped, and his alone, penetrating yet soft, would come forth upon the air thrilling all hearts, though with an argument not addressed to the crowd.

1.]

46,

After this scene in which so great and startling a departure had been made from the formal traditions of the Jews, strained and amplified as they were by the week of many generations of ratualists upon the original teachings of the Lw, our Lord aparted from Jerusalem as the other planns value or and returned to Galder. It is 12 to a ratio or the ratio of this visit was some fitter and some fitter and the results favour to a ratio of the ratio of the

LOPELLAS AND OF A LEXT

I.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

met in the courts of the Temple, in the rejoicings of the feasts, or out in those green arbours which were planted on the Lousetops and in the open spaces of the streets, watching the strangers go by and greeting their friends from the country. "Where is he?" "Think you, will he come up to the feast"" "For there was much murmuring among the people concerning him;" and many discussions as to his character and claims among those groups in the leafy tents. "Some said he is a good man, others said, Nay; but he deceiveth the people. Howbert no man spake openly of him for fear of the Jews." The Jews here mentioned, as in all the accounts of the subsequent story, mean, as is plain, those described in the Old Testament as "rulers" or "princes," at this time the Sanhedrum, the national government, a body made up of the chief priests, the scribes, or interpreters of the law, lawyers, or disputers on that all-prevailing subject, and members of that strictest sect of formalists, called Pharisees. The members of this governing body were not all pious, though their very livelthood depended upon the prity of the people. They contained within theraselves the lively sceptarsm of the cynn as well as the obstanite formal sm of bigotry - those who held all re-Lgion lightly and believe a neither in angel nor spirit: anithase who we oberton binding allocar, life in the by Jago of det led according syst had ewhich they . I cather a see and a control ten a growing read typh to a Allinean related to looked via teas to earlie deal for the and the solution of the solution Tall at the fire n i d d d lie , o d d set e sen s sa se i ivaduat the time to fat , so passed to a

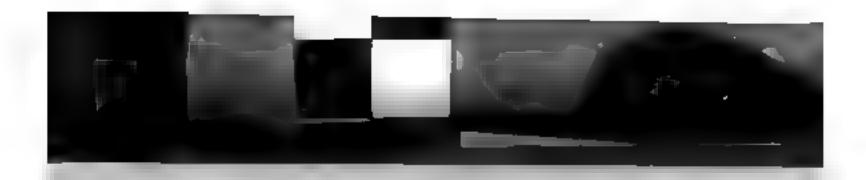

THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

I.]

471

ing among that learned circle, the superior classes of the city. He knew the "murmurings" of the people, the questions from one to another, but not how they would ask each other at the meetings of the Sanhedrin "Will the crowd. "Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am," he cries, "in the Temple as he taught," raising his voice one cannot but feel to still the rising murmur, "And I am not come of myself, but he that hath sent me is true, whom ye know not. But I know him : for I am from him, and he bath sent me." The crowd seethed and raged around moved by conflicting impulses while he stood calm having thus proclaimed his high commission so that all could hear, dominating the tumult. "They sought to take him," those of Jerusalem who were on the side of the authorities -" but no man laid hands on him, for his hour was not yet come." There is, indeed, through every line a sense at once of bewilderment and of awe, the surging of the throng, the opinions as diverse as were the elements in that mingled multitude, the bigots with their large phylacteries, the country folk come up for their holiday, the more serious pilgrims not knowing what to think - "When Christ cometh, will he do more naracles than this man doth?" rises another murmur in the crowd. We are told of no immediate naracle dore in Jeras dem, but the Galileans must have brought a hundred tides of were in and even here there may have been worders a told, blessings that radiated from hit, she in yed, and which per trated the crowd with a sens of the presence of O e in the midst of the saces said so sail. In replace ever been, and a second second second layer risen 11, to a labor of consecuent towards the recommendation of a spensing, f , f , f , t the second they could 1 → 1 ← 1 n when he A I I sook 1, 11 r da dis

THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

1.]

473

of Messiah's mission, to gather back the lost tribes of Israel, to bring back the scattered race and make it one. "What manner of saying is this that he said?" they asked each other as they poured down across the bridge and by the great stairs as the evening was falling, strange a new knowledge to his mind, with continually increasing interest and wonder though without any fur-

THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

475

1.]

but we know that he had already made use of that image of the living water, so doubly full of meaning in the burning East, on various occasions; and the effect at this moment would appear to have been very great, insomuch that "the people when they heard this saying" said "of a truth this is the Prophet," while others said more bold, challenging the very foundations of belief on which the whole system of Jewish religion rested, at the very outset of his ministry there? And their eyes were naturally fixed upon the multitude, as appears in the entire nariative of John, watching intently every change of sentiment, marking how the groups would form and melt away, how the bearded Jews would turn to each other, the women put forth a shriller voice of comment, heard here and there among the murmuring of the deeper tones. "Of a truth this is the Prophet!" "This is the Christ!" mingled with the corrective comment which asked "Shall Christ come out of Galilee?" "Should be not come out of the seed of David, out of the town of Bethlehem?" Perhaps there were some there who remembered that scene in the Temple so long ago when old Simeon blessed an infant of that race, perhaps some who never could forget the children slain by Herod's cruel order that an infant King of the Jews might not escape him. But this wonderful figure in the milst of them, this voice which went to their very Learts, were they not those of a man from Galilee? Thus rose the tumult, the discussions, the close contreversy a mined on local in autorame among the crowd. which fixed the eyes of the biloved disciple, keen with anxiety to this Mister's subtractioning this mass of exaction of the place of the Solly and var in krist, it was through the end of votage into the arms what at a single of a single-need r recent the solution of the al, st to this, id heard e e ta e i , ei a v sign of the state of the s moved as yet to put himself entirely on the side of the new prophet, and yet he could not hear this cheap condemnation of him (knowing well as he did that never man spake like this man) without protest. "Doth our law judge any man before it hears him?" he said. In such a case even the claim of justice sounds like that of a partisan "Art thou also of Galilee?" cry the bigots, turning upon him "Search and know? Out of Galilee ariseth no prophet." It was not much of an argument, perhaps, in reply to those who had heard and seen for themselves; but such as it was it silenced Nicodemus, not ripe for any great confession, as it had silenced the police and guardans of the public peace.

I.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

477

Nevertheless, this hot discussion also seems to have passed without consequence, for we find that early in the next morning our Lord came again to the Temple, where "all the people came to him, and he sat down and taught them " We are warned by all commentators not to take the wonderful and beautiful incident here inserted as part of the authentic record. It is suggested that the story of the woman taken in adultery is probably a very old fragment of tradition preserved by being inscribed upon the margin of an early transcript of the gespel, and from thence transferr d to the text by a succeeding copyist. It is on all the rost tem trkable and, we might say, clear of ristic are darts in the narrative, car of the most over a Chitastic constances, un ar shar, har about the state in some wonderid a view it trasport vitors or sear. The fact tradition statements of the state of special cospect is typical constraint to the tearly that it is begin as a telescope tessible. Material Italian to op-

1.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

479

a contemptuous abruptness, breaking in continually upon his discourse, "Where is thy Father?" "Who art thou?" they eried "Does be mean to kill himself?" -to each other, probably with a harsh laugh of angry criticism, when he warns them, as he did the multitude. that the time is coming when they shall seek him but shall not be able to find him. In the midst of these interruptions there would seem to have gathered a larger comp. by of the devout, who were in the constant habit of attendance at the Tetaple, while he spoke with the Pharisees and the frigments of high exposition which these wronglers permitted to be heard reached the judgment, at least, if not the heart, of the wider group, which probably came by degrees towards the open portico to look into the clamber where he sat, discussing his own claim to be heard, with that unchangeable calm unmoved by any importmence. And "many believed on him," a strange statement amid the opposition and angry contempt of the others, and the broken fragments which were all they endd herr of what he said.

The inverse circle, no doubt, dissolved from time to the cone set of prestoners dispersing to betake themselves to some gore in out into daily than that of cross-examinate the Gold an exhaust probably, they thought a person rook to at dark to keep the whole another took their particles of crowd has a root of sit in laster as cutsile, where the crowd has a set to set of interest and contact to the constraint of the contact of the contact the doctrine which proclaimed them all the servants of sin, as other men were, as he went on; until at last their arrogance and pretence of superiority drew from him the tremendous accusation, "Ye are of your father the devil." Had the Pharisees, the original controversialists, come back by this time to take the part of their brethren? The words "Now ye seek to kill me" would seem to imply this; at all events, the Jews who were around, notwithstanding their partial belief, took up the challenge and threw it back upon himself.

1.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

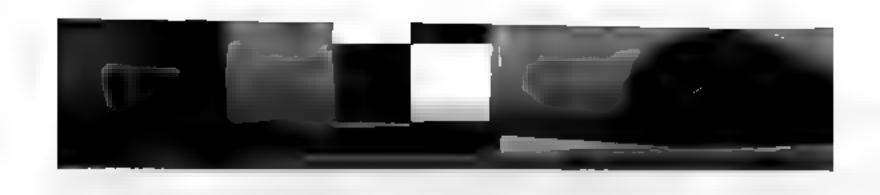

481

Nothing could have been more dangerous for his own safety than such a discussion, for there was no longer round him the partial protection of the multitude, the contagion of their exertement and enthusiasm, but only the party whose entire principle of life was struck at the very roots by his assumption, and whom he never for a moment conciliates or yields to. The gentleness, the pity, the toleration, and profound understanding of every human difficulty which have been so conspicuous in him here disappear. The smner, the publican, the beggar, all who were in masery, . If who had learnt the impossibilities of this life, and their own powerlessness, had been received by Lim with never-failing tenderness. Even after the young nam who was not able to make up his min a to the sear he set his yealth and unperforce, des sole a cocker, viile an affectionate regret, net blooms, and burnatmer insight had something of in the respondiblisten. den same is lier in ice i temselves. infection to the contract of the insistance to the same 1 to the lang which I sampede att a record of intlect, even wat they is the early to the in detining record goes on, but vainly, who could doubt defeated by their own hearts that beat and their own arms that trembled: and "Jesus hid Himself and went out of the Temple," concealed by the dazzling and bewilderment that must have come to every eye.

483

water line-all is eloquent with recollections. Along the beach with its fishing villages, now mostly swept away, with its fishing cobbles laid up on the gleaning shore, and the soft hills on the other side in a haze of sunshine, the pilgiim feels as if there wants but a little, and he might himself see that wayfarer moving along, calling the sunburnt fishers from the boats. turning round benignant to see those two following who had been with John in the wilderness, pausing to cast a look of kindness upon the tax-gatherer at his bar, whom no man cared to speak to, but whom he bid to follow too. I can never forget a Sunday morning there, a rapture of light and freshness, soft waters rippling on the beach, soft airs lifting the opened hang ings of the tent, the lake lying calm in the great glory of the smishing the distant outlines all veiled in mists of light, and a serse of still adoration, hushed as if by his very presence, nor the subsequent voyage across the lake to where the city which rejected him, that Capernaum which was exalted unto heaven, lies dumb in marticulate rum, not one stone standing on another, upon the water's edge. All blessed was the day, the light, the hom, even the sudden quick wind that sprang up, so that the boatmen like those of old, had to "toil in rowneg' regirest the hapid rising of the waves; all blessel, though filler sir at a vith other poignant meraor side to be regotter and the sign never long door intent upon the way, thinking of her sick child or ailing husband, as well as the groups in the synagogue and the coteries of the learned and superior persons, who even in these simple regions clustered round every centre of teaching. It must have been felt that when he returned again after all those controversies and commotions at Jerusalem, something decisive must happen, either the revelation in power of his office as Messiah, or some demonstration that it was not he which should restore Israel. Emissaries had come from Jerusalem, always with the intention of entangling him in his talk, of finding some occasion of judgment; and Pharisees and Saidheees, priests and scribes, were all on the alert to make this the final episode in a career which shook their world to its foundations,

Jesus himself would seem to have responded in the full force of his human nature, not less affected by factious opposition than by the tenderness of behef, to this great excitement of feeling -He had never hesitated to pronounce las judgment upon the formalist and the hypocrite, but now that all the powers of evil were rising against lam, those hips which had spoken nothing but blessing, and whose finaliar language was always that of love and charity, opened with lofty reproof, delivering the sent according to the casapproval, the "Woe unto you Plattisees and Santiaces, hypocrites," which joined together the two contentary series as far as the poles apart frace is the relative tract on offerce and bitter opposition satisfied spring returns to They har assed his steps where ver here every actual of existo contain a contactorist pixt is now with caraning questers a vertagible service, station, in section grouptest no it or is rich artisling. The fists was now server test. Herdin my ustrants regarded be roken that he was coming, every house was emptied of its inhabitants, every corner filled with anxious gazers, the sick brought out and laid in the streets in all the horrors of primitive disease, an extraordinary feature of the scene, hailing him with a clamour of beseeching voices, mained and wounded and forlorn, trembling with fever, writhing with pain, holding up withered limbs, and Pharisees, with all their pretences and exactions, lying in wait, keeping an evil eye upon every movement, misinterpreting every act and word: while the multitude closed in around, all bent upon personal advantage, the recollection of those miraculous meals, the bread of Bethsaida, the wine of Cana, and, probably, who could tell, the hope of other gains and other prodigies from the hands which could command everything-filling their minds with a passion of desire and eagerness. The morning time of natural beneficence and harmony was over; they were ready to tear him in pieces, in faith as well as in opposition; on the one side in fierce acquisitiveness to get what they wanted -on the other in hatred to sweep him out of their path: but the one as self-seeking as the other, a rage of belief as well as a rage of wrath. Between the crowd, hungry for miracle, impatient to have his mission proved by some great convulsion of nature, and his enemies, desiring a sign and watching his every movement, especially on the Sabbath day, which their vigilant superstition made anything but a day of rest-it would be

 $\overline{}$

THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

49

"'Which nineteen hundred years ago were nailed For our advantage to the bitter cross," "

may have walked its unchanging streets. But of this journey there is no record except in a faint glimpse here and there showing the wandering party in unlikely places on that way. It is supposed to have been on their return towards Galilee that they passed by the has appeared to many commentators to make it likely that it was on some height of Hermon, under the level of the gleaming snows, that the Transfiguration took place, instead of upon the familiar Tabor of the home land-scape, so round and green. But these can only be regarded as suggestions, since neither Hermon nor Damascus are mentioned in the record. It is difficult, however, to imagine what could have taken them to Casarea Philippi, unless they passed there in the course of a long journey; but Tabor would be in their way on their return from the borders of Tyre and Sidon" to Galilee, passing close by the little Nazareth, the name of which Jesus still bore, and where his early years were passed.

Whatever may be the fact about these details, which are of so much inferior importance, it is evident that the mystic incident of the Transfiguration took place about this time. It had become necessary that those disciples, who were soon to become apostles, the chosen witnesses of his life, as of his death and resurrection, should be prepared for the overwhelming revelation which awaited them, of the end, so far different from their hopes, of their Lord's ministry. It was while travelling by the

the office of his Master, the one utterance following the other with very little interval between, and the words of the Lord, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona," had scarcely died out of the air, before he had to bid the same eager speaker "Get thee behind me! for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of man." And it was very shortly after that he led them up into the high mountain apart, where they saw a glorious vision, and heard the conversation of heaven about that which they had refused to credit, that which their minds refused to receive, the decease to be accomplished at Jerusalem. It seems little likely that they derived a tach benefit from this at the tir c. The been warned of what was to come. It was now that he called a little child and set him in the midst of them, and told these eager enthusiasts, still bent upon great place and promotion in the kingdom of Messiah, that they must become as little children if they would so much as enter into the kingdom of heaven; and instructed them that if a brother offended not seven times but seventy times seven he should yet be forgiven;

IN THE S CORES OF THE SEA OF CALLER

and githering the little ones don't hir, commanding to lorful them not blessed the utile wondering group up a the way with a time it as reserve to be lorgotten. And it was row that his divide north nore seat than ever in the sale and very fact the quote hir good, he looked upon and have the very fact on which it kest all the Commandments have as we the provet and very find it in heart to come out the provet.

n.]

sense of supernatural power and desire to silence for ever every cavilling tongue, have desired to call down fire from heaven (in the exultation of their recent experience that even devils were subject to them in his name) to consume the churlish town-is so natural in the extraordinary circumstances that we feel with them the intolerable impatience which such an affront would produce But when he turns and rebukes them, the higher nature is so natural, too, in supreme comprehension and pity that every thought is silenced. "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." It was John, the apostle of love, who had spoken-a man of vehement feelings, yet whose whole teaching and doctrine merged in his liter life into the reiteration of the lessons of brotherhood. He would have destroyed in his hasty impulse, love of his Master being so hot in him: but he would have been the first to queuch with tears and with horrified catreaties the ruin he had made. His Master knew him far better than he knew himself.

That there might be a certain justification for the villagers from an economical point of view in their refusal. to receive him with the multitude which followed, an cadl ss tran - which though no loubt it began to fall off as the distance from Galilee pacreased, was still a vast crowd of people coords to sviolablance and place we travelso allow. If it they tell of the digrees is apparent heret, box is this has a cate or band after rotler staypase tree. pills than to per er that that contains a souther to leave all n. 1d wn il l a to be for Jesus was not reviewed both. In this south hall dews ser co co at a testa Dedication, at when the most of the shift shift was +1

п.]

and now more easily lodged in their decreased numbers and more intimate and near to each other than when 11.]

ence. This is the only mention of that little privileged household in any gospel but that of St. John: and the brother is not named who might be the master of another house, or absent upon his ordinary affairs, on the occasion strange possibility that it might come true: for he was no believer, not a person of awakened intelligence at all:

In the meantime, while that argument went on would seem to have been quiet in the Temple above, most continuous discourse which has yet been repo to us in Jerusalem. Jesus seems to have delivered v out interruption that day not, we may be certain, w out an audience, but one most likely of an unpolikind, the daily worshippers who never failed, with haps a greater leaven than usual of strangers and sir folk bound to no official maintenance of ritual and tr tion. One can imagine the various committees of Sanhedrim occupied with the new wonder that had I brought before them, messengers running to and fro v one communication after another, and ever-new pretions to be taken to keep this fact from the knowledg the multitude while all the time an act more great, enniciation of the great truths of the Gospel went on disturbed. Once more as always at Jerusalem it is own great and unique is ssion, declared in the ful terms, which our Lord explains to his hearers, w out compacts so or filtering the lam the door of sleep," by who hadone they an enter the fold the good sleperol, buy can my life for the sheep level with the that I to a take it again. No i taketh it bearing, but blay the wicklingsell. privation is it dose, and I I very ever to take it ag 1 s in partill cer as a tay later" S An sistle of the bound of the board of the b A med to be the case the vib it must eleve in the te what ' to the ' or a love

All car ford's addresses at level at Jar salem

80

And who can wonder that after the uninterrupted utterance of that Sabbath morning there should have been "a division among the Jews for these sayings"? Not long could that calm last. He who did not come to bring peace but a sword, in this special region, to that organisation which it was his mission to replace and transform if not to destroy, could not long be left to tell the wondrous tale of his own being and office undisturbed. Much he had said that was wonderful before, but never anything so wonderful as this. "Many of them said, he hath a devil and is mad,"-what wonder? Take the words alone and they were more than madness, they were blasphemy, and the most tremendous assumption ever made by man. Yet those who looked upon him, who followed the discourse to its end and studied the speaker, knew that these were not the words of him that both a devil, and that never man spake like this man. And evidently by this time the news of the last miracle had spread among the crowd and moved the baser sort, so that even the Pharisees had begun to ask: "Can a devil open the eyes of the blind?"

The Apostle pauses here to give a touch of local description. "It was winter, and Jesus walked in the Temple, in Solomon's porch," which is believed to have been the great closser ranning dong the east im wall, which rested upon the vist victs still existing cilled Solomon's stables at the ked t war as the Me nit of Olives. Lake the Greak phinose bers, the Herboot reliefs walked taler the shelter of potential rains and their disciples. nal taked har alter the Spline to specialisations extrealy to suggest doubt a sl. questia. There no do dicit wis that a had be die a be in min the round, a sere shall each comer a marg for the dims and the state of the first seeds utterance than this? And some of them were transported with rage and horror and took up stones to stone him. These missiles must have fallen from their hands when he turned upon them, ever calm, and asked for which of the works he had done they stoned him? an expression which looks as if they had actually begun to hurl at him the first pieces of nairble or stone they could pick up, fragments of the perpetual reparation of the Temple. "For a good work we stone thee not: but for blasphemy," they cry. And surely it was blasphemy, the most unhesitating, the most assured, blasphemy, which by no possible excuses could be explained away.

It is most curious that at the final trial when Jerusalem was ransacked to procure witnesses against Jesus, no one of the men who seized those stones in their rage, who heard him say "I and my Father are one," who listened, scarcely able to contain themselves, to his assertion that he could lay down his life and take it again, produced themselves to prove these manifest blasphemies. Had they become his followers? were they so shaken by the majestic truth in him that they dared not bear that witness which would have been conclusive?
Certain it is that only some trumpery accusation about destroying the Temple to which nobody gave the least rith was brought against har and the hearers of these extreme words were sill in. It is one of the most received second to details to a last of story.

But no liquory detail I that was institulent his problem, to his a second His time was not yet, there were starting so that the reason be said when addition a constant of the reason be said when addition a constant of the reason be said.

11.]

him he was gone: and for a few months more he returned to the life of the wandering prophet and teacher, with this difference that he went to his own Galilee no spared till the husbandman had dug about its roots and given it another chance for life all short, all full of meaning, teaching their lesson with one vivid illustration from the common objects about. His more intimate intercourse with his disciples seems to have been chiefly directed to their encouragement and the strengthening of their faith and trust in time to come. He bids them to look at the birds twittering upon every bush. things of no account, yet not one of them forgotten before God He bids them consider the lilies of the field which toil not nor spin, yet are arrayed as never was Solomon mall his glory: how much more value are they than the spurrows, how much more than the flowers? When they are brought before the magistrates and into the synagogues to answer for themselves, he bids them take no thought what they are to say. "For the Holy Ghost shall teach you in that same hour what ye ought to say." How troubled and perplexed they must have been as they listened, not knowing what he could mean, nor why it was necessary thus to comfort their hearts beforehand, as for some invsterious need yet to come: and how then excitement would be relieved. yet disappointed where he turned aside and looked at the crowd behind and spoke his parable, leaving the germ. of Divine story to curcken and factify in the common seil who has verter to a semi-2. They could not suit there is to the reactor, teremes be made to sereth starts at at one sed at Jerusale which we are seen to the contragrent enator to in the late parties by the case of several sense of approclassing the received at the as from it, rate than illicited to sister, of stephend which or or all twitter or bles, save in one or two cases, are shorter, more con-

11.]

him when need was the alms of Godhead. Here was no wilderness to demand a miraculous meal, the thing of all others which had moved the multitude in Galilee: and it was only when human need appealed to him that the Divine arm was raised but were there some exceptions to this reserve, when the need did present itself. At the entrance of a certurn village on the way there stood a miserable band of ten leters not approaching closely, as was forbidden to then, i it stanling after off, moved by sudden hope as the ram at at the road that preceded him reached their cars. It is a sight that any traveller may see at this day of that are enging East. I shall never forget the thrilled merror despity and strange realisation as of a tanchar scene, that moved my own mind at the first sight of that line of dark figures muffled and show then yet betting a dreadful face or shapeless limb arrivar to the east of their wretchedness-seated upon the edge of the role outside a smiling village, with their ery of upwal to every passer by and the rattle of their mency box's. Just so these men, dark shadows with velical rates in the evening sinshine, must have stood as he approclass of theiring tor an alms more great then any our "Go, show yourselves to the priest," was all to said to a pulse of his discourse while promited the stress of the amount were seeking out what not deploy to a vital and hard to give to those nest all a seasons at the Larsheld at which they nest have storaged to a rearrance arrest to fulfill to the contraction of the contra and I control of an estimate see if the were news could be to a access to a ader knows. i to rate a by lar one who is and periops his disthe floridation to be a server of the management

п.]

Was it, perhaps, for the more utter conviction of James and John who had desired to call down fire from Heaven on the hostile village that our Lord paused to remark that this one grateful soul among so many, only eager to prove their emancipation, was a Samaritan? and that the benevolent "neighbour" whose story he told them to point the moral of perfect charity was of that de-had become weary by this time of those perpetual outcries of the multitude, or the cynical ingratitude of the lepers may have disgusted them—for those of them who were in advance rebuked the blind man for his ceaseless cry. Not so their Master, who heard no cry for mercy unmoved; and the train followed on to Jericho with the once-blind man following, surrounded, we may be sure,

A DA TOS HAT OF THE GOOD

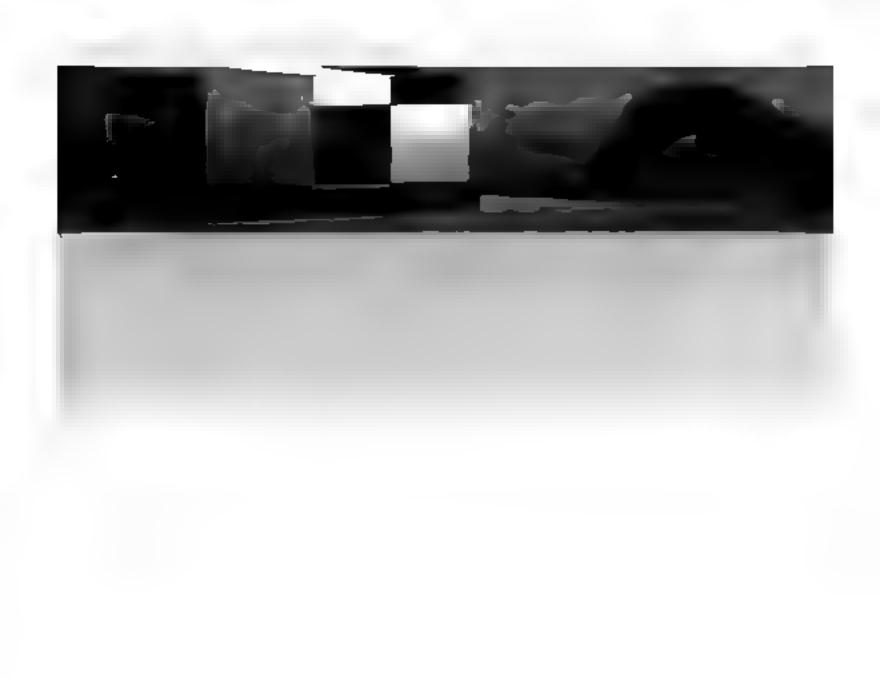

strate to his

JERUSALEM.

CHAP.

case of the young man at Nam, he had met the burnal procession and seen the august of the mother, such anguish as, being there with that power in his hand, he could not pass by. But in this, every circumstance was full of meaning. He did not for once bestir himself at the first cry of the appeal, "be whom thou lovest is sick ": but remained quietly where he was "for two days," leaving the sickness to run its fatal course. Where he was at this time we are not distinctly told, except that it was beyond the bounds of Judea, and probably still on the other side of Jordan, to which he returned after his missionary journeys as for the moment his settled place of abode. When at the end of the two days he proposed to his disciples to go to Judea, he was surrounded at once by anxious remonstrances, "Master, the Jews of late sought to stone thee, and goest thou thither again?" This would seem to establish that there could have been no intermediate visit to Jerusalem, since that attempt to stone him is the last recorded. When they perceived that he would go, there is a tragic resignation in the tone of the disciples. "Let us also go that we may die with him," s. vs. Themas, the sceptie, he who found it so hard to believe the deeper a visteries of the Gospel. Clearly Le perceived what was personal and positive with 118

To Juce page 519. JUREA TO ROAD TRADITIONAL SPOT WHERE THE MAN FELL AMONG THINKER.

n.]

walk into the grateful quiet, the rustle of the corn and the soft shade of olive-trees. They were so much concerned, however, for their Master's safety, which was their chief thought, that anxiety for Lazarus seems to have held a very secondary place in their minds: and it is evident that they took their way with great reluctance towards the country in which his far more precious

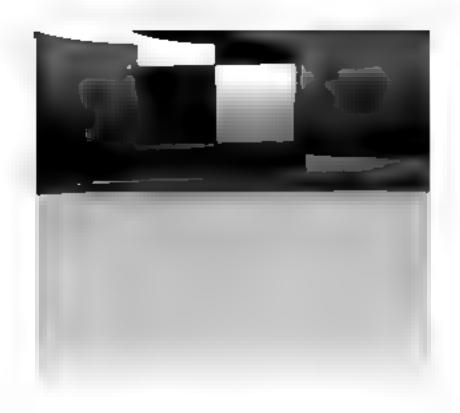

JUREN HOLD HOLD TRADITIONAL SINT WHERE THE MAN PELL AMONG THIRVES. To face page 518.

11.]

walk into the grateful quiet, the rustle of the corn and the soft shade of olive-trees. They were so much concerned, however, for their Master's safety, which was their chief thought, that anxiety for Lazarus seems to have held a very secondary place in their minds: and it is evident that they took their way with great reluctance towards the country in which his far more precious desire," that is with all his heart, to accomplish those rites for the last time, and eat that common supper with his disciples, before fulfilling and abolishing the great typical sacrifice, it was essential that he should remain hidden and quiet until his hour had come; for by this time the factions of the Jews had thrown off all disguise, and the high priests had given orders that he was to be taken into custody wherever found. No doubt Jerusalem had been stirred to its depths by the last and greatest miracle which he had accomplished in that hurried and unexpected appearance between two periods of exile, when no one looked for him, appearing and disappearing again before any warrant or officer could be sent after him. And now absolute silence enveloped him around, for a few weeks perhaps—it could scarcely be more: before the supreme moment came of the world's history,

CHAPTER III.

THE END OF THE JEWISH DISPL

eration that has given them birth but nothing can ever obliterate the traces of that agony and passion, the great Sufferer upon the Cross, the shining figure of the Resurrection morning. What a mean and impoverished world would that be from which these recollections were driven! But such a condition is one which, happily, the mind cannot conceive, even the very assailants of these heavenly mysteries having their own minds and the atmosphere they breathe so permeated by them, that it is in the very strength of that breath of life that they sound their little trumpets against the influence which permits them to be.

But here no controversy can stand, no criticism find place. Many martyrs have died, but none have done more than approach the crucified feet of him who died on Calvary; many great images have stood forth to men, heroes and prophets and kings, the creations of an inspiration little less than dryme; but no poet has ever imagined and no history has ever produced any being so great, so noble, so pure, as to reach the level of the supreme and awful, the tender and familiar image of Love Incarnate. They group themselves around, behind him, at his feet, though they may not have known him, enveloped in a great humbleness, saying every one, Weare improfitable servitots, while on his hips alone we feel it to blasplier v. will oknowledge it is of right that they Sould say, "I lay so my that I may take it gan". What is made so the attle ross of light that perchalculate or a state of the choice. He is the great Mr as lewbone in the explosion text bound. When there are four in a there we allow allow inch have been use or ed sit. If it is, it. I, the placets and systems while we clistically be a structed and in the

m.]

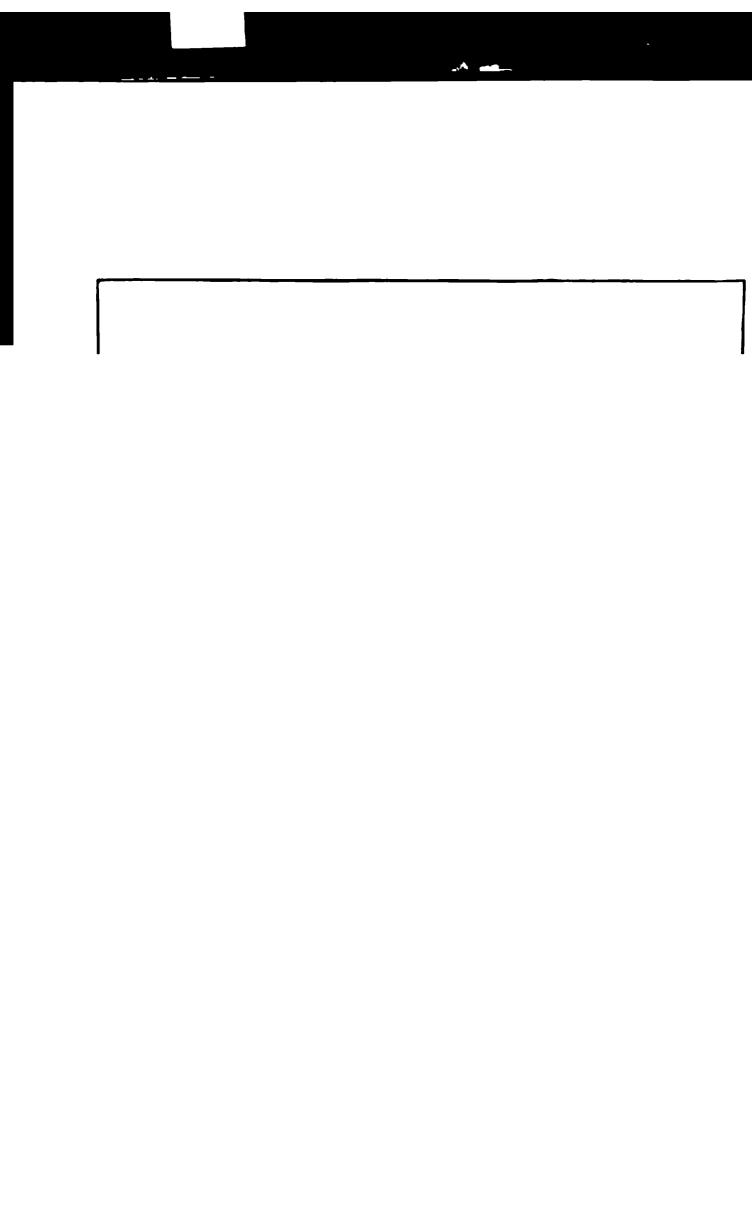

him—there may then be found a spot of ground on which to place the lever which will move the world:

doubt ringing still with the local glory of that miracle which is its distinction through all ages; and nothing can be more natural than that many should come to this entertainment not only to see Jesus, but Lazarus, the subject of that wonderful intervention. All the personages, indeed, of the great drama were there, along with the humble good man who says no word and makes no sign of personal identity, he who had lain four days in his grave in what wonderful suspense, or revelation of the mystery of death, there is not a word to tell us:

"Where wert thou, brother, those four days?
There has no record of reply,
Which showing what it was to die
Had surely added praise to praise."

It was not the purpose of the Redeemer that such a revelation should be—enough that in all mysteries we know him who is the solution of them all. And from Lazarus there comes no word, nor any indication what manner of min he was. "Lazarus was one of those that sat at the table with him "—a man known to the whole village and all the neighbours who crowded about, pointing out to the Sabbath day visitors from Jerusalem, the man who had died and was alive. And there was Martha, the kindly soil, serving—enough for her to follow her natural—s s, to—ring the bread and wine, hended them by the light of his own trouble, the menace of an end about to come might have made the defaulter more and more conscious of the winding up and the exposure before him. Something of this desperation, so familiar to the most common modern fashions of evil, must have stung him at the sight of that three hundred pence which was thrown away, and driven him out in exasperation to make his fatal bargain with the high priests; thus covering his own crime with a universal explosion, out of which he may have hoped the Master

ш.]

Jerusalem. Skirting quietly along the side of the hill without more thought probably than is always present in the mind of a traveller who enters at all into these sacred associations, we suddenly come round the corner of the winding path upon a sight which takes away the no the large has been as tally spread out in the state of the state of the state of Morialism and the state of the state o

CONTRACTOR OF STREET

m.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY. 531

whatever may be the changes that have come on all around. He saw the Temple with its splendid cloisters crowning the plateau of that hill where we see only the exquisite little Moslem dome in its blue and white. But, nevertheless, as we do now our Lord paused and looked at Jerusalem. He saw what John, no doubt, saw through the glories of his after-vision, the white, shining, blessed place, like a bride arrayed for her husband. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, that stonest the prophets." O city doored, yet deathless! The glory of the white town expands and grows bluired and broken in the sight of the late-coming pilgrim, child of the modern ages, through eyes full of irrestrainable tears.

The entry into Jerusalem would thus be made in the happy tunnilt of the arriving crowd, with much joyful commotion such as accompanied the arrival of the pilgrims, thankful to reach the end of their journey, welcomed by many triends, and adding to the general tide of festivity and national solemnity which they had come to share. Perhaps it was the shield of this rural company pouring in to pay its vows, which gave that immunity which is so strange considering all that had gone before, to our Lord in Lis first reappearance, after the hot discussions that hid arisen about him, and the orders to take him wherever he might be found which had already been given to the peace of the Temple. A cording to the tresser at St. Mark as confined himself. crit, first flat for sections to set, on more and "lookng acid a control of a delegations, retiring to beth averable seems and a somethic next day that have be some and the scorage of small reads. The area of the crevel at gets from for booths, a consistence of the divesel salabare to all the tres maker of gossip and levity in the very entrance to the Father's house. There is no need for sacrifices now, but the crowd of petty merchants in the court of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre—and even, not to go so far, about the precincts of every great Catholic cathedral—keeps great profit—thus, with a cynical absence of precaution, sanctioning an abuse for which there was no excuse to

beyond precedent, if not that it was true, what was his authority? was but going over a bygone question. And whether these might be new inquirers who had not heard that statement, whether they desired to elicit another declaration which they could use against him, it is equally evident that they neither ventured to object to what he had done, nor to fulfil the duty which would seem to have been almost demanded of them, and hay hold upon the man against whom the rulers had already issued their warrant. What instinctive terror or awe it was which caused their hesitation, whether it was concealed under the pretence of a design to collect further and further evidence against him, it is impossible to landed from one to another to show that effigy of Casar which furnished an infallible answer to the next cleverly constructed question? Should one pay tribute to Casar or not? the most subtle inquiry, calculated so certainly to embroil him with one side or another and bring him within the sway of the secular heathen tribunal, that secular arm to which exasperated Churchmen have always been so ready to appeal. We know what confusion awaited the askers of this question. Then came the gay and cultured scribes, with a problem at once scornful and profane. Whose wife should that woman he at the resurrection who had been married to one brother after another according to a painful provision of the Jewish law? The mystical refinements of religion with which we have to deal in the present day are in nothing more obstinate than in their absorption in this question of sex, which by some of them is forced on the unwilling listener with a pertinacity which does its best to make even religion indecent. The Master quenched this flaming firebrand with celestial calm and that authority which was "not as the scribes." He went farther even than the immediate matter, looking upon these sceptics, pretended teachers who soiled the spring from which they drew, with eyes more severe than his wont, and set forth that true doctrine of the resurrection, that everlasting germ of spiritual life, which the Jows had never expressed in their doctrine, and which critics essent held rever been recorded to them. What s lence tell upon the breathless assembly when these few repestie words were sood of Abraham, of Is u.e. an cold web, "well know a fit a of daily use, the

Planta low veil for a final the dischall redoctrine propers social discrete and a result of the discrete for the band in the second management of the final formula of the final formula of the final final formula of the final formula of the final formula of the final formula of the final final formula of the final formula of the final formula of the final formula of the final final formula of the final formula of the final formula of the final final formula of the final formula of the final formula of the final final formula of the final final final formula of the final final

III.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

58

very claim of the race to special privileges and their only standing ground in the world. "He is not the God of the dead but of the living." What words were these, silencing every vain speaker, filling with awe the great Temple raised to the honour of that name, penetrating to the farthest verge of the national history—and manswerable, beyond the reach of argument, leaving

Is it, one wonders, sheer ignorance of this Divine tatement of faith that makes the not ill-mentioned philosophy of our days imagine the Service of Man to be a new revelation, superseding the service of God?

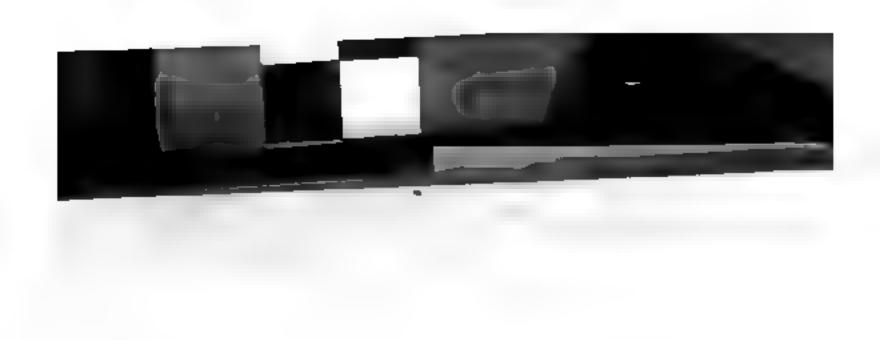

Even in those Temple courts, with all their factions, a better inspiration existed. "Well, Master, Thou hast said the truth," cries the speaker who had put the question, caught in his own trap, if trap there was-a candid and honest man among those herce disputers. But for this voice of surprised approval the bands of objectors, the critics and opposing doctors, seem to have been silenced, not knowing what to say. And then Jesus in his turn became the questioner. They were dumb when he asked why David should call the Christ his Lord when he was his son, as when he asked them by what authority John had baptized? They could not and dared not reply. Thus the first scene in which he appeared in the Temple in the days of his childhood was repeated at the end of his earthly career: "both hearing and asking questions" -leaving his adversaries confounded from their own mouths, silenced, unable to say a word in reply.

In these points, so briefly told, filling one chapter only in the record, the fundamental question as to who he was and what was his work,—which was that on which the Jews professed then selves most anxious:— is settled with a fall riss which they did not ask, and in a sinse which, perhaps theyled and confused as they with over a first of the confused as they with over a first of the confused as they their made with a first or a first of the with Casar's a region of the confused as the Casar's a region of the confused as the confused with the confused and a first of the confused and the confused with the confused and a confused to the confused and the confused with the confused and confused and the confused and the God of the living, and which was the kingdom not of Bayid only or David's son, but of the Lord and Master of David -such were the great final statements by which he explained trinself, and placed the evidence of things not seen before their eyes. That they did not understand them we may well allow, that such know i edge was too woodered to tou h thought figil have be the firmly have one ale of the let one that in the stars fresh man were holden that the confidence is that it is chall the will not but I then and the fire house the expense of a test have the elapone. thousand structe in a fittle sou that all all not tright, example the time to date the exvere confounded in all their arguments, though the great constitution of the new spiritual world which their own had toreshadowed was placed before them, so that had they been faithful to their own inspiration they must have recognised it, they refused to do so. They must have turned away from that last question which cut the ground from under their feet, silenced, confounded, even paralysed; for not a finger was lifted against the bold speaker, he who had warned them that the kingdom was to be taken from them, and the stone which they had rejected to fall upon them and crush then, to powder; and who now denounced them without disguise, "Woe urto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!" as they stele away like a defeated army, leaving the eager multitude, and the disciples always circling him about: now triumphant, no doubt, though they too were little less dazzled and confused than the Pharisees, in their Master's victory over his enemies.

Nothing can exceed the strength and force of the denunciation that follows, poured forth in the very stronghold of their sway, and in the ears of many who no doubt would make haste to repeat to the ecclesiastical rulers of Judea, every word of that stern anathema. "Ye devour widows' houses and for a pretence make long prayers. Ye compass sex and land to make one prosclyte, and when he is ande ye make him tenfold nore freely and all there was self. A escale and blind! this choose, a togethable of condemnation not a first nesse that so, can translation, which ves in dealers of the stress and consider creative time threat emists pleaf in a the world I digital into near the artist of the He sat tl +11 + 1 + 1 + 111 + + + + + and a language

To face pupe 543.

THE CHARLES IN THE TRAINER FRATONISE.

m.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

54

hypocrisy and pretended boliness which brought virtualities into disrepute: yet not one of all the officials of the Temple interposed. It was well known that sentence had gone forth against him in the Sanhedrim, that orders had been given to arrest him whenever he appeared. Yet there he sat and discoursed, and set forth the dreadful indictment against these men who had virtually the power of life and death in their hands. Awe seems to have seized upon both masters and servants—the one shrank away confounded, baffled at every turn; the others must have hung about helpless, not knowing to whom to turn for their list orders, final of owers did not remonstrate against this lingering is probably another indication of that excitement and confusion that was in the air, a bewilderment of all faculties, which prevented even those who loved him most from perceiving the risk of hanging about in the midst of danger. But he hunself was not hurried, or anxious to escape. He must have paused and looked and noted what was pointed out to him, in the great sadness of what he knew to be his final effort. The day was over of possibility and hope-and now he could scarcely see those be untital walls and domes standing strong under the level mays of the westering sun, for pity of the tertible seems when they should be beaten down, so that not one stone should stand on another. When he left Jerusalem, and sat down to rest upon the way, which rounds the slope of the Mount of Olives, opposite the Temple, with his eyes upon the white and shining city, so peaceful outside, so full of every unchained demon of rage and blasphency within, his countenance was still sorrowful with these thoughts. The disciples gathered round him eagerly yet full of awe, asking the explanation which be so often gave them. "When shall these things be? And what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world". That some dim perception of the approaching custs of which they had been so often warned, and of his separation from them, they knew not how, had proven ted their minds is evident from this posticial is it as also by doct that they assocard the destructor of Jor sale, with the end of the weild

There is an extended a propose of the thought that car Lend house doubt a compact to no chis day me greateness. Idea of the extended had a consented to the extended of the extended had a consented to the extended of the extended had a consented to the extended of the ex

III.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

545

tremendous events. On this great subject it is too daring

oints it out as the last. What more was there to be said? He had left no stone unturned to convince, no further exposition possible to make his mission clear. Patiently he had heard and replied to every problem his enemies had set before him, so that none could be in any further doubt as to what he meant. He had cried once more in the Temple in the midst of all "I am come a light into the world. He that believeth on me, believeth not on me but on him that sent me." Neither among the Pharisees nor among the multitude could any delusion be left concerning him, or at least concerning the office he claimed. No longer a prophet out of Nazareth, no longer the Son of David alone, but the Lord of David, the Light of the world. It cannot be maintained for a moment that he had left Jerusalem in any doubt. He was the Son of God, the promised Deliverer-or else his blasphemy was proved before all men. One thing or the other; God or an impostor, there is no midway.

And then it would seem there was a pause: making their way softly along the side of the hill, stopping to rest, watching the sun go down and all the meltings of the evening light sink over derived en, continuing as strength permitted their way account the gnarled olives and the waying corn, the total in mound reach the village where the lamps were any lighted and the table spread for the evening in the Some commentators imagine that on this evening was the great supper at which Mary and ited by Land for his burial, and Judas, exasperated, set out to exist in a part from the crowd. But that does not seen to be past had by the narrative of St. John. At had a constant to be softly a roads some of the rest invites of the ten been told to the village tolk of Betbany, or the stragglers from Jerusalem who came out, as after a wonder, to hear what he would say: and to whom the description of those who said "Lord, Lord," but left all deeds of goodness unnecomplished, might well apply. But the cents of the Temple knew Lim no more

It is strange to think what was going or there. Many of the charf raders be reved on 1 m. and these courts mast again have eclosed with prestions. What was be? Was be coming a so of the Photise's eguing it to encourage and stimulate can rather to a frem "Percaye ye not how we previal nothing, behold that will us one of the laim." They allock a red or to acred character as the people of God, they, the children of Abraham? The rumour of such arguments might probably reach him in the quiet of the country in which he was, bringing ever nearer the inevitable catastrophe.

But that period of holy calin and intercourse, or else the immunity which he had enjoyed from all persecution in the recent days spent in the Temple, had so strengthened the disciples that none of the desperate devotion which made Thomas say, on an earlier occasion, "Let us go that we may die with him," is apparent in their demeanour now. The two who were, no doubt, the usual providers went into the city by his command to prepare for their Master, the night before the Passover, probably that all night be on the spot and ready to fulfil all rightecusuess on the bext day -one of them, we must behave, being the guilty Judas with his terrible secret in his heart, aftentive to note all arrangements, that he might betray the most favourable spot for his Master's arrest to those who had purchased his services. Lord directs them to the place as if it were one already selected by himself. Tradition, which, however, I fear is of little authority, fixes "the large upper room" as having been situated in the little group of buildings which surround what is called the tomb of David, and which he on the southern side of Jerusalem, a little way atsile to the all list it arm, a not have been; one point, less consider as a second the little band. would be not be a to a describer from the hillside read straight for each to the late through, and by the ights no possess to the light authorities. 1 11 11 111

The section of the period of o

III.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

549

Into the narrative of that holy feast it would be a

Peter who it was? and there seems to have arisen a pained inquiry among the rest, each one echoing his neighbour, scarcely understanding perhaps what the question meant, "Is it I?" Perhaps it was generally supposed among the party to be some commission to be executed, or at least something vague in the future like Peter's after burst of assurance, that in no circumstances could be deny his Lord, and the piece of bread which was given to the traitor would be but a sign of the Master's usual tender courtesy to the one among them who had to leave the table on his administrative business before the others. That they could have divined what he was to do quickly is impossible, else hasty Peter would certainly have stopped his goings for ever, before even the Lord could interfere.

There is a laze over them all as of the very dazzle and confusion of a great crisis uncomprehended, during the whole of that extraordinary scene. Its wonderful preface and accessories:-the washing of feet-strange and touching lesson in the midst of those contentions who should be greatest that seem to have continued up to this very chimax—and the discourses that follow: are all full of this strained and troubled tension of human faculty, labouring at its utmost after the Divine, and breaking into an almost childishness of remark and question in its mability to eatch the thread of meaning. While he speaks, more can analy now than ever before, this haver man spaket. They follow him like blind men it a distance, mair uring start, questions confusedly in the railst of its days of words. "Lord, we know not whither thea goest, and low our we know the way?" Lond, show as the Pathen, and at suffections " "Lord, Lew is it that thou will ranchest these time to exaud not ment to a self " . Will be more at least them to us mi.] THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

55

all seem like the expressions of listeners, addressed a it were in an unknown tongue, straining every power to follow, feeling themselves swept into a great current which they can neither stem nor understand, and in the flood of which they eatch at anything that may arrest the tide for a moment, or help them to standing ground. Nor is the utterance of their dazed satisfaction at the end less remarkable, "Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no parable. Now we are sure that thou knowest all things, and needest not that any man should ask thee; by this we believe that thou camest forth from God." Strange words of weakness, utterly overpowered to the marches of the colors of weakness, utterly overpowered to the marches of the colors of weakness, utterly overpowered to the marches of the colors of weakness, utterly overpowered to the marches of the colors of weakness, utterly overpowered to the colors of the c

the rains were over, with the Paschal moon clouded in the sky, and everything hushed and sanctified in the coolness of the night, that they listened with heads howed and hearts full of awe and wonder, to the ineffable majestic words of that prayer, wonderful communing of God with God, which the silenced atmosphere of earth

THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

m.]

553

their silvery leaves in the shining of the moon. At that nguish unspeakable which sympathy could not share, nor love help; "Father, if it be possible; all things are possible unto Thee." He had bidden the disciples when he left them to pray that they should not enter into temptation; but he himself had all the brunt of the most terrible of temptations to bear. It was not enough that he should soar above the human as when he said, "Father, I will": the strain, the stress, the conflict, must be his as it was theirs of whom he was the representative. "Sore amazed and very heavy"-restless, going and coming to see, perhaps, if any cared, if there was one to stand by him: and there was none, not even of those who loved him most, not for one hour. "Smnon, sleepest thou?" Peter was the strongest, the most eager to go with him through everything-and yet he could not watch one hom. There was never a picture so terrible, so wonderful, so natural the going back again and again, the same words almost as if in the depths of his anguish the human weakness of repetition, was all that he was capable of: very man, bearing upon him the burden of the conditions of that race from which he would not liberate himself till the last.

The coming of the darkling procession among the trees, in the depths of the valley, the sudden flare of a torch or two—the momentary tumult when Peter, dazed, starting from his sleep, snatched at the sword which in pitcous uncomprehension be had brought with him from the channel of the supper, and struck a hasty blow with it—in—the darkness—indicate of corfusing light; the one call—presence dominating all, stopping that clamour with a word, healing with a teach the wound which was so needless—the circle of the cark multitude round, corfused in the months t—the Teache police—halt exact—the H—triad is more —their presence with

THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

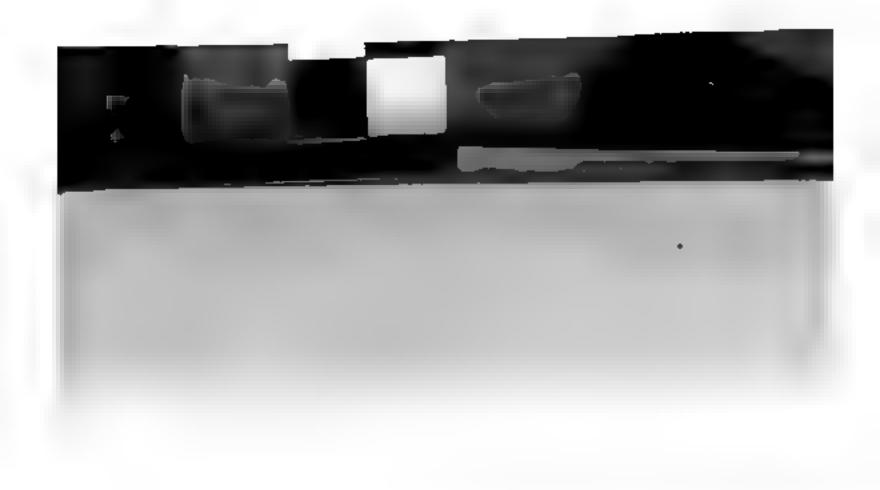

III.]

555

elf when a suspicious doorkeeper pushed him aside with a hasty accusation "Thou also wert with him "— "I know not the man!"

How can we explain this defection, this astonishing failure of the heart? Even when he heard the cock crow, and conviction came upon Peter: when the Lord from the other side of the hall turned his head and looked at him, - was it with a smile at the speedy realisation of his own warning? with nothing but the reproach of love we may be sure:—the rough Galilean good for nothing but to die at his feet, we might suppose. not surely to revolutionise a world-did not break through the circle of staves and spears and fling himself on the ground before his Master, to share whatever might befall him, as many a lesser man has done :- but went out into that terrible dawn, in the chill opening of that awful day, weeping, struggling with himself, rather in the collapse of despair than with any burst of devotion. To turn his back upon it, to try to ignore it, to cry aloud to God, negligent and unheeding, for those ten legions of angels who could change everything in a moment, but whom the Master would not ask for: was this all there remained to do? Did the city sleep unthinking, when Peter burst forth into its streets, or was it waking early to the preparation for the Passover, and beginning to bear by flying rumours, always awake like circ before the race of mankind -that Jesus of Nazareth had been seized, to it be was before the judges, and that no one could tell what wonderful thing might happer that day?

The town was full of straights and pilgrinis, lying a win to smatch the rong at society in every corner, in every klong a guest of more and sturing anly because of the issumment and new row of the rong a collition.

this new excitement thrown into it must have thrilled the restless city from end to end. The prisoner before the Sanhedrim, the charge of blasphemy, the eager

But Jerusalem all surging about that terrible scene is nore within the range of the modern writer. I have little doubt that the many-coloured crowd which throngs every street at the present day-when the little population of the city is swamped in the multitude of pilgrims, Christians to keep the Easter feast, Jews to keep the Passover, jealous Moslems to keep the peace, and make their own fictitious celebration at the grave of Moses-resembles much more, perhaps, than any other modern crowd resembles one of two thousand years ago, the influx into Jerusalem at that great and memorable Passover. Going along the line of street which is known now as the Via Dolorosa, on the Good Friday of 1890, it was impossible not to feel that just so must the surging masses have closed upon that fatal procession, the soldiers clearing the way, the wondering spectators gazing over each others' shoulders, pressing upon the sufferer, as he made his way up the toilsome steep, his boddly frame worn with the night's vigil, the exhaustion of the garden and all the farewell scenes neutralised by no hour of rest, no moment of quiet: while every new street and lane poured forth its spectators to gaze at him, and the hoarse shouts of the multitude rang in his ears, and the jibes of the mocking Romans and their scornful laughter at the Jew criminal and his Jew perseenfors alike, tose through the fumult. Not that tears were wanting even then. "A great company of people and or women which also bewarfed and lamented him." Not a Ewere joined in that Lourse shout of "Crucify him!" The mocking and the laciliter and the cruel cries were broken by that wail of which alone be took any notice. And so the dreadful procession toiled by. Steep and rough as those streets are now, they must have been still in we storm with their involved of our fishmes, and

ago. In the heat of the midday, amid the pressure of the crowd, carrying that heavy weight under which a weary frame exhausted by sleepless nights and laborious days wavered and fell: with all that tumult sweeping round and the anguish at the end which was more than martyrdom; our Lord made his final passage through those streets of Jerusalem, in which he had done no violence neither had deceit been found in his mouth in which he had put forth his hand so often to heal and

e / 1 / 1.5

ш.]

here the great darkness that quenched both sun and day would come over a vast horizon as if the whole world was filled by it: and there would be room for all the passers-by to pause and gaze, and for priests and fierce Pharisees to stand around and utter that wonderful confession, more protound than Peter's, more all-expressive in its enmity than the warmest utterance of enthusiasm or faith, the very warrant and seal of earth put to the act of salvation. "He saved others, himself he cannot save" unconscious testimony never to be gainsaid! the witness through all the ages, of hate to love.

And low in the side of the hall is a tomb, cut in the rock like all the tombs of Judea, not now a new grave -centuries old, dark with age and the filling up of the soil, yet still distinct, with its shelf, its couch of stone, place made for the last relies of mortality yet never finished, one rocky bed and one alone, having been occupied:-"in a garden" wild with uncultivated herbage, yet not altogether without trace of its ancient use. this Joseph's tomb, the place where the watch was set, to which the women came in the morning, where the angels sat, and the sun of the resurrection shone? This will probably never be certainly known until we meet m another state the witnesses of that event, and trace with them every ballowed spot, it such an indulgence of human feeling may be dreamed of . But the thought that it may have been so is one to raike the heart swell, and the terrs rise, is the pulgram stands alone in the silence outside the six, isty ted by no clamour of contending eroods, with only in a colover bind, no scent

ATIA description and used telescents to the so extraordinarily carrying out all many treaters of our later trust have been and

ш.]

THE FINAL TRAGEDY.

565

of meense or glare of lights, but the fragrance of growing grass, and the sight of the sun. There is no room for human memories in that spot where the greatest of earthly events took place: yet the strained human soul moved to its depths may be permitted to turn aside with a pang of gladness, to think that this grave was discovered in the bowels of the earth with all its solemn possibilities, by General Gordon, a tender reward and grace from heaven, almost a sign of intimate sacred friendship and tayour, to that true servant, and brother and follower

ford I and

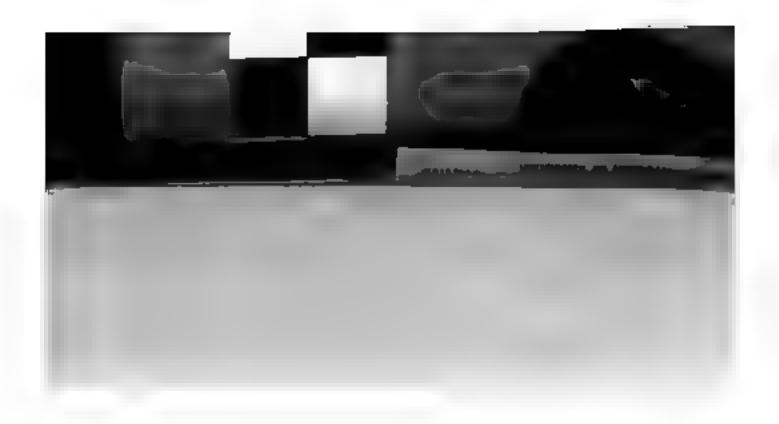

When that great act was accomplished, the story of erusalem, the chosen city, came to an end. Through all the vicissitudes of mortal life it had survived, with tenacity and obstinate persistence when cities much greater mouldered into dust. Besieged, conquered, burned, emptied of its population, trodden into dust, it had risen again time after time, its walls and its shrines ever renewed, its unchangeable traditions carried on. Internal dissensions had raged in it, its sanctuary had been desecrated again and again, its little kingdom torn to pieces, its free-born children carried into captivity. Through tragedy within and conquest without, and fire and convulsion it had still continued, renewing its youth like the eagle. But now its hour had come, and the use for which it had been preserved was accomplished. brief and awful Passion of the city followed the Passion of him whom she had rejected in about thirty-two years. And if the fiercest stand of resistance that, perhaps, ever was made, the most desperate and tragic valour, could m any way atone for the cruelty and falsehood of previous history, then the Jews in that last act of their national history might be partially forgiven-were it not that treachery and cruelty still accompanied them in the heroism of that terrible struggle fears of the high priests were realised; the Romans took away both their place and people, and for some centuries it appeared that id last the race, the sacred places, the memories and traditions of the caty of David, and the Mount of Zior, had been star ped out for ever. So had thought the Assyrians five hind ed vecrs before; but ther, exprises had become again an auton, and long outlived the rice that chirical than off rechains and weeptig. The destruction made by the Rethins was still There was not late more defended; again its people, so many as remained, were driven like chaff before the wind, but all that had happened before, and only marked an era in the history. Now, nowever, the plow was final, the annals of the city vere closed, and all its emblens and its types fulfilled. Everything an the strange and mapressive strange what it is tell even to remarked the new plus, but to the extinction of the city of a contract of the plus next of the interval of the interval and its position of the entry of the interval and its plantage of the interval and its plantage of the interval and city of the plus of the interval and its position of the entry of the interval and its position of the entry of the entry

ret that the city should remain in the possession of the wild Ishmaelite, the enthusiast of the desert, are all acts so strange and so unparalleled that we can but feel the mystery of the future which is involved in them to be dunly shadowing underneath, as the mysteries of the past are all involved in the wonderful tale. traveller comes round the slope of Olivet and sees suddealy before his eyes lying white in the sunshine the holy city over which our Lord wept: -the sacred hill covered with shrines in which his name is not named save in the potent interence of that demal, inscribed around the Dome of the Mahommedan, which in its very assertion that there is no Son of God suggests to all ignorant yet intelligent souls that he must exist who is thus so defaulty and solemnly denied -with the closed and built-up gate below through which those who thus deny him believe that he is one day to ride triumphant into the ancient home of his name, the mystery and wonder and hope of that future comes upon the gazing pilgrim m a silent rapture of indescribable emotion. For a thousand years and more the hearts of Hebrew poets and prophets so swelled and rose at thought of him who was to come, the Son of David, the King of Israel, the Prince of Peace-sin event which they understood as little as we understand my Second Coming. heart. I own, acknowledges a fould superstition before the closed applies of that Govern Gate. The old, old trees of Get iser in complete, in the valley, the little problems and sector star etters a little mullet ten there as SI Hardy A one agran and enter tion the valley of a larger to the lofts arts of Islans are Wisantell' Basthe seperatura el these yellows a cultura partier, most SEE SHIP, OF CHEEK SEA LOUGH CONTRACTOR that might be! The prophet upon this very hill may have stood and gazed and pondered what manner of man that should be whom he himself had described so minutely, he who was to come as a lamb to the slaughter, the rejected and despised of men.

INDEX.

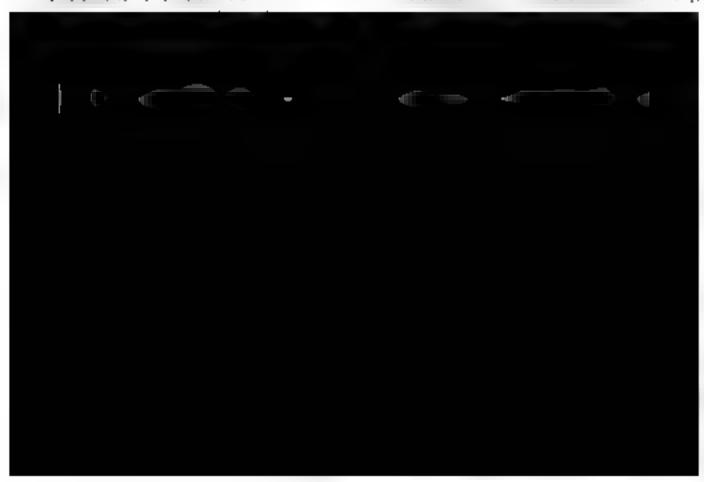

ABIATHAR, 37, 38, 145. Abigail, 41 Abishar, 45, 67, 122, 124 Abner, 24, 46, 52, 68, 69, 140 Abrer, 24, 48, 52, 53 Andrew, 457.

Anathoth, 280, 298, 299, 310, 364.

Aprecyptial books, 411, 424.

Ark at Kir, 01-Jeann. 20 80.

To U. As Sear-

Dyrus, prophecies concerning, 225; supposed contemporary prophet, 230, shows favour to Jews, 357, 358, 368, 369.

Damascus, 53, 90, 229, 247, 252, 254, 316, 492

Damel, 298, 355, 356,

Darius, 375, 375, 378, 412

David bis family, 6, visit of Samuer to Louse of Jesse, 7. a. shopherd and poet, 8, anomiced by Samuel, 8, his shopherd's song, 9, he considers the heavens, 9, his lineage 10-12, plays to Saul, 12, goes to visit the urmy, 12, sees Coluth, 13 and kills lam, 15, songs of triumph 15, incurs anger of Saul, 17 , beloved by Michal and Jouritlan, 17 his charm of munner, 18, Michael es lato dews from window, Pr. Bus to Rt. male 20, is pursued by Stulis messenge's 20 by San arself, 'I returns to G brid 22 talks to Jonathan, 23, story of thi feast, diseral lity distultion 21 song of s rrow, \(\tilde{\pi} \) ff, \(\tilde{\pi} \) In Nob. 29 p. st. aves lansteament, in the sword of fi it of these to tree of is the cived, 2, pages and mas, and these than the wilderness, 2), his f llowers 35 , three bringhtness (3) , broken men ' 6 cays of Adal 6 del vers Kedah from Philistines 38 (frads floro trise Soil in the case 4 eurs off Jos skirt, i to lung 44 breaks may excep-45 per vivori Scalacil Asia Do a spaci o David 47 (s.) of ideas 23, 49 process Trivils capte day SIL Tel 8 of this parameter τ_2 (I. A.10) lent, at his constants after as flying to England, 53-54; well received by Achish, 55; Ziklag given to him, 55; his raids on Achish's allies, 55 war of Achish with Saul, 57; dilemma of David, 57, action of Philistine chiefs, 58, David sent away, 58, finds Ziklag desolate, 59, recovers captives and spoils, 61, end of his career as outlaw, 61, reception of news of Saul's death, 63; elegy on Saul and Jonathan, 64, leaves Ziklag, 66. settles at Hebron, 66 rewards men of Jabesh-Gilead, 67, battle of Joab and Abner, 68, seven years at Hebron, 70, kingship different from Saul's, 73, union of all the tribes, 74: Jerusalem the capital. 76, position of Moriali, 79, proposes to bring up the Ark, 80; David's strong religious faith, neglect into which Ark had falen, 81 Frought up from ho se of Abanadab, 82, aceibut to 1 77 th, St. David " was a Splease L. 'No Ark abandoned, 8.5 January taken up, 84. Da-I date s before the Lord, Ps.du, ' Laft up your Leads So Machai's auger, 86-See seas the with Philstines, 87 story of well of Bethlehem, 88-89 s access and victory, 90. subdites all enumes, 90, builds palace 91 observes to build Tems plc=91 offering refused, 91; disappointment of David, 92; Das 1 with raws from war, 94; cross up at life trult temptation, 9c Barlsleba 95 death of 1 c.d. (Nulcius parable, 96). Decrease representative Marchaelt of tes c. ld. 98 stary of Anthon. are I u a 🤭 Cull of Anthon, 1.0 th J.t. f. Visidom, 10s, the ws court at her jurable, restored to favour, 100, rebellion breaks oct 108 David's flight, 108, and merlents of flight, 110 111, cause of his panie, 110 at Mahaham, 416 David's correcty to captains. Deal gently with: the voting main, 1117, wasts for news, 118 wait for Use up, 48 Jost a reproof 121 trimeghor interactor bresalin 171 sons of R2₁ (r) 2 de er hest dought of long 26 hs y its 15 express c The part has no r

8 fat primate so a find talonja a jeseraca a could follow the George George State s growth to add done it to see a Arright 23.

death of his wife, 389, portent fulfilled, 40, 31, prophesies resteration, 342, 545, vision of dry bones, 40 plan of new Temple, 447 the gate for the Prince, .51 referred to, 248

Ezra special in eston, 378 no escort on armer 381 prayer I mp So remonent of a heather way so 84 made on of the Line 4 fe

GALLIE USINGS IN ITAL CALLERY TO THE CALL SO IS menocibs a dept in a outline r

Cytus, prophecies concerning, 225, aupposed contemporary prophet, 250, shows farour to Jows, 357, 858, 308, 369.

Damase us. 53, 40, 229, 247, 252, 254, 316, 492,

Daniel, 298, 355, 356.

Durbes, 373, 375, 378, 412. David his family, 6, visit of Samuel to Louse of Jesse, 7, a shepherd and poet, 8, anomied. by Samuel, 8, his shepherd's song, a, he considers the heavema, 9 his lineage 10-12, plays to Saal, 12, goes to visit the ягту, 12, мех Goltath, 13 and kills from 15 songs of tranaiph, la, theurs aug r of Stut. netoved by Mieled ain b Jonatina, 17, his charged maniper, 18 Michal lets him lown from window, 1) iff is to Raman 20 is pars ted by 8 also messingers 20 by Sud Line self, 21, rollings to Galcab, 27, talks to Jointlini, as story of the feest, teleman by Jonathan 24 source sorres 27 flegle to Nov. 28 prost gives into showl at a task of Goliath a Bost feat of will received to the terms of a tiss, not this at, in the las followers, wilderness, 5 5, three 'maghties, so keti mer De cases of Adul-June 56 delivers Koslaa fisca Ploastines 8 and Is then tals 29, Soul in the last 45 eas off his short, 45 minus te long H. bretks or cut a Dopin vivid Surved Vec displayed Dead 47 psins of adversiry, 19 procure or i Davids done are Str. 50 of his enginees by not vis-Ant 51 heavy shows and pass flying to England, 53-54; well received by Achish, 55 Ziking given to him, A5, his raids on Achish's allies, 53, war of Achish with Saul, 57, dilemma of David, 57, action of Philistme chiefs, 58, David sent awny, 58, finds Ziklag desolate, 50, recovers captives and sports, 61, and of his cureer as outlaw, 61, reception of news of Saul's death, 63; elegy on Saul and Jonathan, 64, leaves Ziklag, (%); settles at Hebron, rewards men of Jabesh-Gilead, 67. battle of Joab and Abner, 68, seven years at Hebron, 70 kingship different from Saals, 73 unon of all the tribes, 74. Jerusalem the capital. 76 pesition of Moriali, 79, propases to bring up the Ark, 80; David's strong religious faith, 81, he got into which Ark had faller, 81 brought up from n use of Ahmadab, 82 necilent to Uzzah, 83, David "was tisple (sed, 183). Ark abandoned, sant taken up, 84, David a mess is tore the Lord, 85 Ps. n. ! Lift up your back, S. Michal's anger, 86as range with Phystones, So stery of well of Bethlehem, 88-89 success and victory, 90, subcaes all enumes, 90, builds polare, 91 desires to bind Tempo 91 s forma refused, 91, e sapport trient of David, 92; Decorate blenus from war, 94; no is well be and temptation, 1 B islicba 95 death of ran 20 Nathan s parable, 96. Dreat strope of any 97 ideath of 1 Sec. 1 98 Story of Amnon et lance 🤲 leath of Annion, (9) (1), 3 f A Salada 105; the ws your life parable, restored to favour, 100, rebellion breaks out, 108, David's flight, 108 and incidents of flight 110-111, case of las pante, 110, at Malagatin 116. Day of centreally to emptairs, "Deal gently with: rews, 118 wail for Absalom, H8 foal's reproof 12 to erghant betern to Jerseen. 22 s of Rizpan v5 1 the transfer of hap a 15 Tax postry 130 Xapass or s 10 (127 4 s chara b) ezed for of Absorp El Goleads - Fish sols graph 12 of these section of 74

death of his wife, 330 portent fu.filled, 40, 41, prophesies retoration, 342, 343, vision of dry bones, 346 plan of new Tempte, 347 the gate for the Prince, [5]. referred to, 348.

the connections. 117 waits or Exist special resision, 378 no co POPT parties, 581 prayer Temps So reimmeration Let a h was a St, finds hoos of the few auti-

COLLEGE SCHOOL TRE right of the second ton so k 1985 at projections or bids of acles of jetter of techniques 140 and responsible to lebrow acciety revealed by blue, 239, usury, drunkenness, 240, 241 Juxury Polytheism, 341-245. his vision of God, 246, his great experience, 246, a great poet, 247, proclaims Prince of Peace, 248, in later days courseller of king, 248 extraordmary symbol of child's burth, $2 prophestes destruction of Jara I and Syrin, 252 song of the vineyard 253, rise of Assyria, 257 proclaimed an instrument in God's hand, 258, absoverthrow Hades welcomes its king, 260- great them: the Mosdali, 265 the Man of Sorrows, 257. tradition of band('s death, 269) Ishbosheth 69 7.5

JARKSH GULKAN 67.

Jacob, 14, 46

Junes (and John), 513

Jehonehm or Jecomali, 405, 530, 436.

Jehoigkim, 296, 305, 304, 305, 306. Jeremiah, a priest, son of Ingh priest, 272, called to be prophet against his will, 272, office of prophet not popular, 274, supposed fraudulent writer of book of law 277 propheres and warnings, 278-280 seized by priests 286 released by rulers 288 the potters vessel 291 served by Pasling and neater 293 put in the stocks 29 cay of despite 2011 writes proph eccs it a voll 297 from total in length 200 prints 6 c ir 500 migra ir to kir 50. United to king who distants at ,0 , I j of joya -CLUS BY by I dire s at proted to av reuple us 307 わったもっ -0.7pt pases t attender to apply to the SE E BY ALL IN REL to the e bondmen, 311, repeal of enfranchmement, 312, denunciations from dangeon, 313 confined in court of Temple, 314, in the horrible pit, 315, delivered by cunnels, 315, doom of city, 316-317, writer Lamentations, 320, carried to Egypt, 324, prophesics restoration, 325-326.

Jericho, 11, 12, 513, 514, 515, Jeroboato II, 228, 230, 245

Jerusalem - Jebus, 2, its situmtion, 3, defended by blind and lame, 3 taken by David, 4. choses of Jebus for capital, 74. negotiation with rulers, 75 command of army promised as reward for capture, 75, won by Joab, 75, wonderful destiny, 76, the three hills, 77, questions about Mount Morsals, 79, David strengthess and beautifies it, 80 proposes to bring up the Ark 80, Ark brought up in trimaph, 82–83, scenes in city; Absalom's sheep-shearing, 101; popularity of Absalom — rebel-David's flight, 108, hon, 107 Absalom's entry, 114 return of David 122 anoming of Solo-[50] Temple of Moriali mon built, 153 bridges over valley, 157 beautiful city, 158 changes m 194 195 212, 215 Jeremiah's addresses to people, 296, 301, grosts of Jeremiah, 297, 320, sicio by Nibuch Chiczzur, 304. lebertelen curred away and 10 000 305 trum defended 308; risto i cot sleves 312 again cathrathers 42 destruction of as Ezekels picture on the attraction of a period city. д Б. в. даг. 319 гадани П 1 1 (a) Mrc. (b) cs. 420 (424) orer system and theoloAbner, 68, vengeance on Abner, 69, no sympathy from David, 70, takes Jerosalem, 74, commission respecting Uriali, 95, message to David, 95, pleads for Absalom, 96, leads army against Absalom, 167, upbraids David on death of Absalom, 121; in disgrace, 123, siege of Tekoah, 124, supports Adonijali, 138; guilty of death of Abner, Absalom, Amasa — David's sentence, 140.

John the Baptist 479-509, 511 John, evangelist, 486, 502, 555 Jonatha: Joves David, 14, his father's confidence in him, 19 warr's David 25 s consilted fast, 440, returns to seek he son, 443, ponders things in he heart, 444, resident in Nazareth 449, at marriage feast, 450; gos up to Jernsalem, 453, Mary of Bethany, 500, 524–546 Mephibosherh, 113, 123, 125 Messiah, 265, 439, 444, 500–520 Micah 231, 263, Michal, 14, 49, 86, 87, Miracles, 452 Moalute stone, 304

NABAT 37, 89, 40.
Nathrin 91, 92, 96, 109, 136
Nazareth 132, 439, 445, 513.
Neb a laidne zzar 203, 298, 290, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 500.

RARSHAKEH, 211, 215, 216, 217, 248, 404.

Rahab, 4, 12,

Ramah, 7, 19, 20, 22

Rehoboam, King of Judah, disappointment to father, 170, probably only son, 170, kingdom broken up. 181, raid of Egyptians, 191

Kuth, 11, 12

SABBATH, 462, 463.

Sadducees in Galilee, 490, their doctroies, 529, 536

Sanballut the Heronite, 387, 306, 397, 398, 402, 404

Sanhedrim, 470, 471, 473, 476, 503, 543, 555, 539.

Samaritans, adversaries of Judah, 368, wives put away, 381, enmity, 392–431

Samaria, woman of, 459-460

Samuel visits desse at Bethlehem, 7, selects and anomis David, 8 receives David at Ramah, 19.

Saul, his troubled mood, 12, his love for David, 12, anger at David's triningh, 16, his career full of mistakes, 18, determines to destroy David, 18, prophesies at Ramah, 21, feast of the new moon, 24, continual persecution of David, 48, enters cave, 43; skirt of his robe eat off, 43, interview with David, 43, night surprise in camp, 44, his spear 45, 46, limited power 48, hattle with Philistines, 63, death 63, clean 65.

Seniacher b. 218, 248, 413.

Spence, son of Bahri, 124

Shimer, 113, 114, 122, 140.

Silvery, 889, 504, 500.

Socratics 227, 443

Solonou, chosen to build the Tenaph 155 promise of peace uch s liv 156 Joach and Abrathar is possible 157, 158 morn er ain try, 143; man of peace, 145, worship and vision at Gibeon, 147, his wisdom, 147, wonderful works, 148, Temple founded on Moriah, 153, bridges burit, 157, promotes trade, 157, 158, 159 the Corvee, forced labour, 160. Lebanon, working parties, 161. ships, 162 receives Queen. of Sheba, 163, widespread faine, 164, song of songs, 165. Ecclesiastes, 165, 168; disuppointment, 169, 170, consolation, 174; nnworthy son, 173, errors of later years, 175, vanity of vanities, 174, the portion of man, the gift of God, 175.

Songs of Degrees, 429.

TABERNACLES (Frast of), 365, 479, Tabor (Mount), 494.

Tathai, Satrap of Syria, 373, 374. Temple, first conception by David. 90 David forbidden to build it, 91, preparations for building. 130. House of God, 136; large contributions made, 136, Solomon's Temple immortal, 164; failure in immediate object, 185, repeated desecration and destruction, 192, 224, repeated restorations, 201, 203, finally destroyed by Assyrians, 224; vision of idolatry in, 334, rebuilding begin, 365; arrested, 388 inferior to old Temple, 575, or superior 1 375. - agam deseerated by Antiochus, 418, restored by Judas Macabres, 423. for the Uniol decorated by Herod, 4.5 on land goes up to the feast in youth 440 Passover, 455 temper of his body, 457, discussions of The Temple 480 teast of A German, 498. Lock Iscourse Good Sheps first 501 saluter of discourses there 504 drives out with Pharisees and Sadducees, | Zaccheus, 515. 535, 536; our Lord's last day there, 544. Tobiah, 387, 395, 398. Tophet, 290. Transfiguration, 494. Tyre, 148, 151, 164, 193, 272.

INDEX.

577

URIAH, 113. Frijalt, 295. Uzziah, king of Judah, 201, 211, 228, 229, 231, 232, 246, 251, 333.

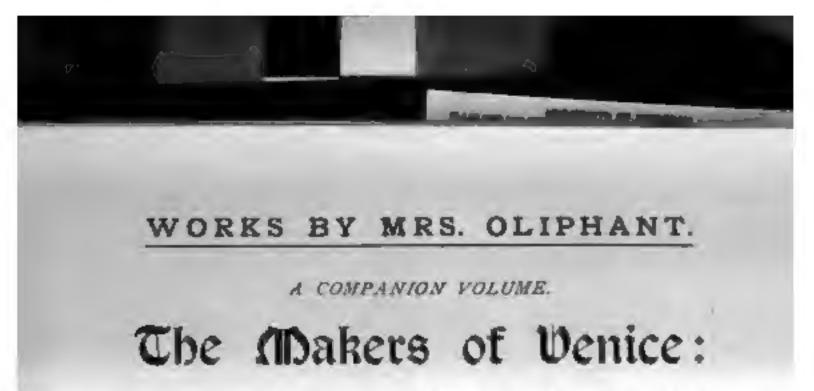

Zedekiah, last king of Judah, 276, 304, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 313, 314, 316.

Zerubbabel, return from captivity, 360; Feast of Tabernacles held among ruins, 365; Temple begun, 366: Temple consecrated, 375; Passover, 421, 422.

Zerniah, sister of David, 104, 122. Ziba, servant of Mephibosheth 113, 123.

Ziklag, 55, 59, 60, 61, 66, 69.

DOGES, CONQUERORS, PAINTERS, MEN OF LETTERS.

With numerous Illustrations by R. R. Holmes, F.S.A. New and Cheaper Edition, Crown 8vo, $3.00. Bound in Half Calf. $5.00. Tree Calf Extra, solid gilt edges, $6.00. Full Morocco, $7.50.

